

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 10, 1863.

AT the commencement of a new year, men are generally tempted to take a retrospect of the year that is past, and to draw from its occurrences lessons which may teach them how to follow out those plans which experience shews them have a good tendency, how to avoid that which is bad, and to amend or reform that which, although not absolutely bad, is capable more or less of improvement.

In our own peculiar province—the domain of law—we may not altogether without profit at this period, consider what has been the working of our legislation, especially that of recent sessions; what weak points in our laws the decisions of our courts of justice have lately disclosed, and what improvements therein may be suggested; nor is it altogether out of place, when Parliament is soon to recommence its annual task of legislation, to indulge in speculations as to what measures either those in power, or independent members, are likely to bring forward for its discussion and approbation.

The Yelverton case, where the validity of the marriage of the unfortunate couple who have figured so prominently before the public, shews that the state of the law relating to marriage both in Ireland and Scotland, is in a state which calls for immediate reform.

The law of Scotland, however, is in by far the more disreputable state.

It must often puzzle a Scot, or a person who has been domiciled in Scotland, to know whether he is married or not; and any lady belonging to a more civilised country, who marries a native of, or a person who has been domiciled for a short time in, that part of Great Britain north of the Tweed, runs no inconsiderable hazard of discovering, when too late, that her supposed husband has already contracted, perhaps unknowingly, and without intending to do so, a Scotch marriage.

A Scotch marriage may be performed in three different modes. First, the regular mode, by banns and a clerical celebration. The celebration, "if such it can be called, takes place in a private house, never in a church; it may be in the open air, and sometimes is; and it may take place in any hour of the four and twenty best suiting the convenience, the wishes, or caprice of the parties." Next comes the clandestine marriage, where there have been no banns, but the parties have been married by a clerical celebration, covertly and irregularly conducted. Lastly, there are what are termed consensual marriages. These also are of two kinds: the first are contracted per verba de presenti; and the second by a promise de futuro, with a copula. The case of Dalrymple v. Dalrymple (2 Hagg. Consis. 54) is an instance of the first kind of consensual marriage, which any one might have thought would have induced the Legislature at once to put an end to such a barbarous state of the law. In that case, John Dalrymple, afterwards Earl of Stair, became acquainted with a Miss Gordon, and they both signed a paper, by which they mutually agreed to be husband and wife. There was no witness to the contract; both parties agreed not to divulge it, and it was not followed by cohabitation. Four years afterwards John Dalrymple married in England, according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England, a lady nearly related to a noble family of the highest rank. It was held that the concealed scrap of paper constituted a valid Scotch marriage, and the English marriage was consequently bad^o.

There may also be a valid Scotch marriage by "habit and repute;" according to which, if a man introduces a woman to the world as his wife, he will not be allowed to discard her, and treat her as a mistress.

What, we think, most open to complaint is, the hardship that may be inflicted, as in the Dalrymple case, upon innocent strangers, and not merely upon the inhabitants of Scotland, who, as they appear, to have a strange predilection for their loose laws of marriage, have perhaps no wish to avoid some of their natural consequences. Other and more civilised countries south of Scotland, to which Scotchmen almost instinctively repair, have, however, a just ground of complaint, and may well call for some alteration in the marriage laws of Scotland.

Lord Brougham, by his act, in 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 96), has done much to prevent the disgraceful and disastrous Gretna Green marriages, and is to be hoped that Parliament will again interpose, and that such a reform of the law of Scotland will be effected, that every person domiciled in that country will be able to know, with some degree of certainty, whether he or she is married or not.

The savage attacks which have recently been made, more particularly in the metropolis, upon individuals in the public streets, and for which the name of garrotting has been invented, has called the attention of the public to the mode in which our criminals are treated. No doubt, at one period our criminal laws were too severe; of late years, on the contrary, not only has a reaction set in strongly against severity, but a species of maudlin philanthropy has rendered the position of the convicted criminal so comfortable, that when, by a system of successful hypocrisy, he has been let loose upon society long before the term judicially allotted for his confinement (for we can scarcely call it punishment) is past, he recommences his old career, not with any dread of the consequences, but with the certainty, on a subsequent conviction, of comfortable quarters and good treatment. The refusal, moreover, of some of our colonies to take convicts has embarrassed us with criminals, who, in this country, where even men with good character have no little difficulty in making a livelihood, almost certainly, however good may be their intentions, from the force of old associations, and the difficulty, if not the impossibility, of obtaining employment without a character, return to their old course of theft, violence, and other crimes.

The Royal Commission lately issued will, doubtless, we may predict, from the names upon it, do much to throw light upon this most difficult social question; and the next session of Parliament will, we presume, embody in its legislation the result of the recommendations of the commission.

With regard to the Courts of Bankruptcy, there is evidently something wrong about them; perhaps the acts of Parliament by which this branch of the law is regulated are not quite what they ought to be; faults of omission and commission are said to be found broadcast through their numerous sections, which at some future time the pen of the skilful draftsman, thoroughly conversant with the principles and practice of the law of bankruptcy, may correct; and no person without such qualifications ought to be allowed to tamper with our statutes. Complaints, however, are made, and they do not appear to be altogether unfounded, as to the mode in which the bankruptcy law is administered, and the qualifications of the persons to whom its administration is intrusted.

Commissioners, who from age or ill health are physically incapable any longer properly to fulfil their duties, ought to retire, and, if competent successors be put into their places, many of the complaints which are now so commonly heard would in a great measure cease.

Among other subjects to be brought before Parliament, interesting to the legal Profession, will, doubtless, be the long-agitated question of the revision and consolidation of the statute law, the digest of our case law, the further fusion of law and equity, and perhaps, connected with the latter subject, the plan of bringing the Courts of Justice together under the same roof. The last group of subjects, we presume, the Lord Chancellor will take under his protection.

Independent members will probably have something to say with reference to the working of the Land Transfer Act, and we may, soon after the meeting of Parliament, know whether that measure has been or is likely to be successful, or whether the office filled by so able a lawyer as Mr. Follett is likely to be a mere comfortable sinecure.

Something will also be said as to the constitution of the Inn of Court. Our Universities have been recently reformed, and a fair share in their government has been given to the members of the University. In the Inns of Court, the Benchers, who are or ought to be only trustees for the rest of the Bar, have gradually assumed to themselves, not only the sole power of election, but the sole power of management. This is not as it should be, and the Bar of England ought not to submit to the sole control of a body of men, who are virtually the nominees of the Crown.

The doctrine of maritime law, especially with reference to the right of capture and blockade, will probably be much discussed in Parliament, but we are much mistaken if Parliament, reflecting the opinion of the great majority in this country, should hastily take any step by which the law laid down by Lord Stowell and other great Admiralty judges may be materially altered or even modified.

It will be seen, from this slight sketch, that in the ensuing session much that is interesting to lawyers and important to the country may be brought forward for discussion and legislation in Parliament; our wishes are, that by whatever political party they may be introduced or carried, good measures will not be marred by appointments, resulting from what in some countries is called nepotism, but for which in this country we may be compelled to invent a more comprehensive name.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 17, 1863.

THE case of Parker, app., Green, resp. (reported in 2 Best & Sm. 299), just published, deserves attention, as involving some points in the law of evidence.

The subject of the incompetency of witnesses, which made so great a figure in the old treatises on the Law of Evidence (in Phillipps & Amos on Evidence, published in 1838, no less than 170 pages are devoted to it), has in modern times shrunk into a small compass, and in all probability will be still further restricted. The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, abolished the incompetency of witnesses on the ground of infamy and of interest in the event of the suit; and the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, did the same with respect to parties to the suit, except in cases of proceedings instituted in consequence of adultery, and actions for breach of promise of marriage; the former of which have since been removed from the jurisdiction of the common-law courts by the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. The 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, contained, however, a more important exception, on the construction of which difficulties have arisen, and on which the chief question in Parker v. Green depended. The 3rd section enacts, "But nothing herein contained shall render any person, who in any criminal proceeding is charged with the commission of any indictable offence, or any offence punishable on summary conviction, competent or compellable to give evidence for or against himself or herself, or shall render any person compellable to answer any question tending to criminate himself or herself, or shall, in any criminal proceeding, render any husband competent or compellable to give evidence for or against his wife, or any wife competent or compellable to give evidence for or against her husband."

Not very long after the passing of the statute arose the question, what is a "criminal proceeding," within the meaning of this section? In The Attorney-General v. Radloff (10 Exch. 84), the Court of Exchequer were equally divided in opinion as to whether an information for penalties, under the revenue laws, was a criminal proceeding within it or not—Pollock, C. B., and Parke, B., holding the affirmative, and Martin and Platt, BB., the negative. To meet this particular class of cases several statutes have since been passed, the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 122, s. 15; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 96, ss. 44 and 36; and the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 62; whether with sufficient words to carry out fully the intention of the Legislature, we need not at present inquire. But qui tam actions for penalties,—although, to a certain extent, they partake of a penal character,—and many charges preferred before justices of the peace, although, in one sense, they may be looked on as criminal proceedings; such for instance, as applications for orders of affiliation; do not come within this section. (Tayl. Ev., s. 1224, 3rd ed.)

The next case deserving of notice, and which was largely referred to in Parker v. Green, is that of Cattell, app., Ireson, resp. (El., Bl., & El. 91), in which it was held that an information, under the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 23, for using an engine for the purpose of taking game without a certificate is a criminal proceeding, and consequently that the party charged is an incompetent witness.

The case before us, Parker v. Green, was an information, before justices in petty sessions, under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 21, against a person licensed under that act to sell exciseable liquors by retail, for that he did, "unlawfully and knowingly permit and suffer persons of notoriously bad character to assemble and meet together in his house and premises;" contrary to the tenor of his license. The defendant was tendered by his attorney as a witness to disprove the charge, but rejected by the bench as incompetent. A case having been stated for the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench, under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, the Court, consisting of Wightman and Crompton, JJ., affirmed the conviction. Cattell v. Ireson was cited by the counsel in support of it; and the observations of Martin, B., in The Attorney-General v. Radloff, and those of Erle, C. J., in Legg v. Pardoe (9 O. B., N. S., 289), where he says, "I do not assent to the doctrine that all offences under the act (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32) are to be dealt with as criminal offences, because in one case it is provided that imprisonment with hard labour may be inflicted for non-payment of the penalty," were relied on by the opposite side. It was also urged that the offence could not be considered of a criminal nature, as the justices were not empowered to visit the party with imprisonment in the first instance, and could only adjudicate him to pay a fine, which might, if necessary, be enforced by imprisonment, but without hard labour.

The Court, as already observed, decided in favour of the respondent; and the reasoning of Wightman, J., seems conclusive on the point. His Lordship said—"Looking at the 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, on which the conviction proceeded, it appears clearly to be treated as a criminal offence; for sect. 21 enacts, 'Every person licensed under this act, who shall be convicted before two justices, &c. of any offence against the tenor of the license to him granted, shall, unless &c., be adjudged by such justices to be guilty of a first offence against the provisions of this act relative to the maintenance of good order and rule;' and for that the punishment is, not imprisonment it is true, but a fine. And in the latter part of the same section it is provided, that, on proof of certain facts, the party shall 'be adjudged to be guilty of a third offence against the provisions of this act;' and it also goes on to provide that the justices may, in their discretion, adjourn the case to the quarter sessions, which may 'adjudge such person to be guilty of a third offence against the provisions of this act,' and 'punish such offender by fine;' thus treating fine as a punishment for offence against good order and rule." Crompton, J., delivered judgment to the same effect, in the course of which he laid down the following general principle, which we take to be the true one:—"When a proceeding is treated by a statute as imposing a penalty for an offence against the public, the amount of which penalty is to be meted by the justices according to the magnitude of the offence, there can be no doubt that the proceeding is a criminal one. . . . Sect. 25 of this act provides, that if the pecuniary penalty be not paid, it may be enforced by distress; and if that be not practicable, then by committal 'to the common gaol or to the house of correction;' and this, therefore, raises the point distinctly, what is the effect of a statute rendering a party liable to be fined and imprisoned if a fine imposed on him be not paid? I am of opinion that that provision constitutes the act an offence against the public, and the proceeding a criminal proceeding; and I will go farther, and say, that the consequence would be the same if the statute had only provided that the act should be punished by fine." The nature of the punishment cannot be the test. As was observed by counsel in the argument of Reg. v. Radloff, an information for intrusion in the Court of Exchequer is not a criminal proceeding, and yet in such a case the Crown may, if it pleases, waive its right to mens profits, and call for the infliction of a fine instead; and the old appeals of felony were civil proceedings (see Ashford v. Thornton, 1 B. & Al. 405, 461), although if judgment went against the defendant he was hanged. Both Wightman and Crompton, JJ., however, made use of another argument in support of the conviction, the soundness of which we may be permitted to question. The former says, "If the argument of the appellant's counsel is right, the appellant might be made to convict himself, and be punished;" and the latter; having in the course of the argument asked the appellant's counsel whether he meant to contend that the appellant might have been examined before the justices as a witness for the prosecution, and received an answer in the affirmative; says, in his judgment, "The Legislature has taken care that a man shall not be competent or compellable in such proceedings to give evidence for or against himself, or be compellable to criminate himself." We apprehend that the competency of a witness to give evidence, either for or against himself, and the privilege of a witness to decline answering particular questions, on the ground that they might tend to criminate him, are two very different things, and should not be confounded. The latter applies by the common law to all proceedings, both civil and criminal, and the words in the 3rd section of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, "shall render any person compellable to answer any question tending to criminate himself or herself," are only declaratory of it.

The other point of evidence in Parker v. Green was this—it having been proved, that on the occasion in question a large number of prostitutes were seen in the bar of the appellant's premises, who were acting in a disorderly manner, evidence was offered to shew that on a previous occasion some of the same prostitutes were seen there. This evidence was objected to, but received by the justices; and on the question coming before the Court of Queen's Bench, Crompton, J., was at first inclined to think that the evidence was not admissible; according to the principle of Reg. v. Oddy

(2 Den. C. C. 264), where, on an indictment for stealing and for receiving the property of A., knowing it to have been stolen, it was held, that evidence of possession by the accused of other property stolen from other persons was not admissible: but on its being pointed out that the evidence offered was not the mere fact of the appellant's having received prostitutes in his house on a former occasion, inasmuch as some of the same prostitutes were present on both occasions, his Lordship thought that circumstance distinguished the cases, and concurred with Wightman, J. in holding the evidence admissible.

There was a third point in Parker v. Green, but unconnected with any question of evidence. The offence created by the 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, is the suffering "persons of notoriously bad character" to assemble on premises; and it was contended by the appellant's counsel, that "prostitutes" did not, as such, come within that description. He argued that prostitution per se is not an offence against society, and pointed attention to the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 27, s. 32, and the 5 & 6 Vict. c. cvi, s. 251, where the words "prostitutes" and "persons of notoriously bad character" are both used by the Legislature as apparently distinct. The Court, however, expressed a decided opinion against the appellant on this point.

REGULA GENERALIS.

HILARY TERM, 26 VICT.

WITH respect to acknowledgments by married women in any colony or foreign possession, being part of the dominions of her Majesty, it is ordered that affidavits verifying the same, made before any court, judge, magistrate, commissioner, notary public, or other person authorised to administer an oath, and containing in the jurat a statement by such court, judge, magistrate, commissioner, notary public, or other person authorised to administer an oath, of the name or title of the office or authority which he or they respectively hold and execute, shall be received as a sufficient compliance with the requirements of stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 85, relating to affidavits of verification.

Jan. 13, 1863.

BY THE COURT.

NOTICE.—The Lord Chancellor has directed the registrars not to pass any order made under the Trustee Act, 1850; the 15 & 16 Vict. c. c. 55 (the Trustee Extension Act); or the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53 (Transfer of Land Act), which shall have the effect of a conveyance or assignment of any lands, or a transfer of any such stock as can only be transferred by stamped deed, until the same shall have been duly stamped, as required by sect. 13 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 55, and sect. 47 of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53.

The Commissioners of Inland Revenue will at any time stamp an order after it is written, and before it is passed by the registrar.

CECIL MONRO, Registrar.

Registrar's Office, Dec. 19, 1862.

JURIDICAL SOCIETY.—A meeting of this society took place on Monday, the 12th January, at eight P.M., at its rooms, No. 4, St. Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square, C. Clerk, Esq., in the chair; when the question of "Our present treatment of criminals" was brought before the society by Mr. Worsley. The Chairman, Mr. Joshua Williams, Mr. Hume Williams, and Mr. W. Marshall having addressed the meeting, the debate was adjourned.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 24, 1863.

THE Court of Common Pleas has given judgment against the plaintiff in Kennedy v. Broun (alias Swinfen). As this will, doubtless, be a leading case on the important subject of the duties and rights of advocates, it is well deserving the attention of the Profession.

That an advocate cannot maintain an action at law or suit in equity to recover compensation for his services as such, is an elementary proposition with which every lawyer and every law student is familiar. It has, however, become customary with many to speak of this inability as being no part of the law of the land, but merely a rule of professional etiquette; and certain dicta of judges have been relied on to shew that the rule does not hold when there has been a special contract for those services between the advocate and the client. Mr. Kennedy's action against his quondam client Mrs. Broun, was founded on this notion, which was defended by him before the Court of Common Pleas with great ingenuity and learning, including quotations from early works in our law, as well as several from the Roman law and history. The Court, however, in giving judgment, say, "We consider that a promise by a client to pay money to a counsel for his advocacy, whether made before, or during, or after the litigation, has no binding effect; and, furthermore, that the relation of counsel and client renders the parties mutually incapable of making any legal contract of hiring and service concerning advocacy in litigation." And having shewn that the dicta in question are either absurd or distinguishable, and that Mr. Kennedy's authorities, English or Roman, did not bear out his argument, the Court finally observed, "A special contract differs from an implied contract only in the mode of proof. . . . The incapacity depends on the subject-matter of the contract, not on the mode of proof. When the contract is proved, its incidents are the same, whatever was the kind of evidence adduced for proof. If there is incapacity, words and implication are alike nullities, and no contract can result."

So much for the law of the case. As to the conduct of the parties to the suit, we have nothing to do with that of the defendant. It is possible that, on some principle invisible to us, Mrs. Broun may be justified in reaping the full benefit of Mr. Kennedy's invaluable services, while refusing him all pecuniary compensation, while either in the shape of honorarium or merces; or she may belong to the too common and well-known category of ungrateful clients. And if Mr. Kennedy's assertion is true, that during the progress of the cause of Swinfen v. Swinfen the relation of lovers—which, as he is a married man, must have been an improper, if not an adulterous one—was superadded to that of counsel and client, and ended, as relations of the kind commonly do, in mutual disgust and animosity, an additional reason is supplied for declining speculation on the motives of Mrs. Broun. But the plaintiff, as a member of the Bar, stands in a very different position. The light in which he appeared for years,—as the able and intrepid advocate of a defenceless female, whose rights were supposed to have been compromised by the misconduct of her former counsel—one of the highest and most talented in the Profession—; and who, regardless of consequences or prejudice to himself, publicly attacked not only the conduct of that counsel, but also the conduct of the eminent judge before whom her cause was tried, as improperly holding private communication to her prejudice;—has vanished for ever; and he now stands before the world as having obtained from that client a deed securing the modest sum of twenty thousand pounds as compensation for his services, and bringing an action at law against her, based on the supposed contract of retainer. Nor is this all. The judgment of the Court of Common Pleas has determined that he had not even the technical law on his side—that as an advocate he stood in the position of any other advocate, and had no legal remedy for his honorarium. Moreover Erle, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, when replying to the arguments of Mr. Kennedy drawn from the Roman law, observes, inter alia, that at one period in the history of that people, "Sicilius, an advocate of singular infamy, offered some of the arguments which have been urged in support of mercenary advocacy;" and in another place says, "In this case the advocate, by disclosing words of intimate confidence, which passed in moments of helpless anxiety, has raised the phantom of a contract for a sum of monstrous amount; and of this we hope we may say, that there is no one in the profession of the plaintiff who would be willing to accept from him this verdict of 20,000*l.* as a gift." All this forms a miserable epilogue to the great cause of Swinfen v. Swinfen, and gives a death-blow to its romance.

We are truly sorry for the fall of Mr. Kennedy. He is well known as one of the most accomplished scholars in England, and is a man of great learning in his Profession, as well as an able and fearless advocate. But his wretched action against Mrs. Broun, coupled with his conduct during the progress of the case of Swinfen v. Swinfen, adds another to the disgraceful scandals in the Profession of the Bar which have lately come before the public. With his conduct, and that of Mr. Edwin James, late Q. C. and M. P., Mr. Digby Seymour, Q. C., M. P., Mr. Serjeant Glover, &c. before our eyes, we cannot conclude without asking, in sober sadness, how many more of such scandals shall we be compelled to notice? Are the final days of the honour and high character of the English Bar really come? If they are not, they cannot be far distant, unless a vigorous stand is made against the principles and practices which are fast tending to bring about its destruction. In the words of the poet—

"Hic locus est, partes ubi se via findit in ambas:
Dextera, quæ Ditis magni sub moenia tendit,
Hæc iter Elysium nobis; at læva malorum
Exercet pœnas, et ad impia Tartara mittit."

Æneid. lib. 6, v. 540.

Is the Bar in this country for the future to be a "noble calling or a pettifogging trade?" To those who wish to make it the latter, we have nothing to say; to all others we commend an attentive study of the following language of the Court of Common Pleas, in this case of Kennedy v. Broun:—"The incapacity of the advocate, in litigation, to make a contract of hiring, affects the integrity and dignity of advocates, and so is in close relation with the highest of human interests—namely, the administration of justice. We are aware, that in the class of advocates, as in every other numerous class, there will be bad men taking the wages of evil, and therewith also, for the most part, the early blight which awaits upon the servants of evil. We are aware also, that there will be many men of ordinary powers performing ordinary duties, without praise or blame; but the advocate entitled to permanent success must unite high powers of intellect with high principles of duty; his faculties and acquirements are tested by a ceaseless competition proportioned to the prizes to be gained—that is, wealth and power and honour without, and active exercise for the best gifts of mind within. He is trusted with interests, and privileges, and powers almost to an unlimited degree. His client must trust to him at times for fortune, and character, and life. The law trusts him with a privilege, in respect of liberty of speech, which is, in practice, bounded only by his own sense of duty; and he may have to speak upon subjects concerning the deepest interests of social life, and the innermost feelings of the human soul. The law also trusts him with a power of insisting on answers to the most painful questioning, and this power again is in practice only controlled by his own view of the interests of truth. It is of the last importance that the sense of duty should be in active energy proportioned to the magnitude of these interests. If the law is, that the advocate is incapable of contracting for hire to serve, when he has undertaken an advocacy, his words and acts ought to be guided by a sense of duty—that is to say, duty to his client binding him to exert every faculty and privilege and power in order that he may maintain that client's right, together with duty to the Court and himself, binding him to guard against abuse of the powers and privileges intrusted to him by a constant recourse to his own sense of right. If an advocate with these qualities stands by the client in time of his utmost need, regardless alike of popular clamour and powerful interest, speaking with the boldness which a sense of duty can alone recommend, we say the service of such an advocate is beyond all price to the client, and such men are the guaranties to communities for the maintenance of their dearest rights, and the words of such men carry a wholesome spirit to all who are influenced by them. Such is the system of advocacy intended by the law requiring the remuneration to be by gratuity; but if the law allowed the advocate to make a contract of hiring and service, it may be that his mind might be lowered, and that his performance would be guided by the words of his contract, rather than by principles of duty; that words sold and delivered according to contract, for the purpose of earning hire, would fail of creating sympathy and persuasion in proportion as they were suggestive of effrontery and selfishness, and that the standard of duty throughout the whole class of advocates might be degraded. It may also well be, that if contracts for hire could be made by advocates, an interest in litigation might be created, contrary to the policy of the law against maintenance, and the rights of attornies might be materially sacrificed, and their duties be imperfectly performed by unscrupulous advocates; and these evils, and others that may be suggested, would be unredeemed by a single benefit that we can perceive."

Reviews.

A Treatise of the Law of Bills of Exchange, Promissory Notes, Bank Notes, and Checks. By Sir JOHN BARNARD BYLES, Queen's Serjeant, now one of the Judges of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas. The Eighth Edition, with Notes from the Fourth American Edition. [Sweet, 1862.]

THIS is a new edition of a work, too well known and appreciated by the Profession to need commendation from us. The original Preface is retained, prefixed by the following advertisement:—"In preparing for the press the eighth edition, the author has to acknowledge his obligation to two gentlemen. He is indebted to the Hon. George Sharwood, of Pennsylvania, for valuable information derived from the fourth American edition of this work, edited by that eminent judge, and enriched with notes from his own pen. To the learning and accuracy of his friend Richard Couch, Esq., formerly of the Norfolk Circuit, and now one of the judges of her Majesty's High Court of Judicature at Bombay, he is also indebted for assistance in collecting the recent English authorities."

The division of the work is nearly the same as in the last edition; the only difference being, that the 36th and 37th chapters of that edition, headed respectively "Bankruptcy of parties to a bill or note," and "Effect of discharge under Insolvent Debtors' Act," are in the present edition thrown into one—a consolidation naturally following the Bankrupt and Insolvent Law Amendment Act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, the sections of which bearing on the subject are inserted in the Appendix.

On the subject of half notes, we find the following passage at pp. 362-3, which is taken without alteration from the preceding edition:—"A man who takes half a note, takes it necessarily under suspicious circumstances (Bayley, 379, 6th ed.), and cannot recover to the injury of the maker. But, where the holder sued on the half of a 5l. note, the other half having been stolen from the Leeds mail, Lord Ellenborough said, 'Payment can be enforced at law only by the production of an entire note, or by proof that the instrument, or the part of it which is wanting, has been actually destroyed. The half of this note taken from the Leeds mail, may have immediately got into the hands of a bonâ fide holder for value; and he would have had as good a right of suit upon that as the plaintiff has upon this. But the maker of a promissory note cannot be liable, in respect of it, to two parties at the same time.' (Mayor v. Johnson, 3 Camp. 324; Mossop v. Eaden, 16 Ves. 436). It is doubtful how far the argument, from the liability of the maker on the second half, would be held valid at this day." We observe, that no reference is made to the case of Redmayne and Another v. Burton, Lloyd, & Co. (2 Law T., N. S., 324). That was an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants, who were bankers, to recover the amount of certain notes, the halves of which were lost in their transmission through the post. Application having been made at chambers under the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, sect. 87, that upon the plaintiffs giving an indemnity to the satisfaction of the Master, the defendants might be restrained from setting up as a defence the loss of the notes, Willes, J., said, "The law on this subject was much before the Court upon a recent case, and the matter is, therefore, fully before my mind. The application is made at the proper time, and the section applies to this case. The Bank of England, acting upon what may be called the Law Merchant, have always been in the habit of paying on an indemnity. My opinion is, that the defendants would be liable to pay without an indemnity, as any person taking a half note would take it with notice; but the plaintiff having offered an indemnity, let it be so. . . . The practice of cutting a negotiable instrument in half was recognised in a late case, where a person gave another a bill to get discounted, who, not having succeeded, returned it to the acceptor, and he tore it in half and threw it on the ground, the two halves were picked up, and got into the hands of a bonâ fide holder for value, who recovered." (See also Smith v. Mundy, 6 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 977).

Chitty's Archbold's Practice of the Court of Queen's Bench in Personal Actions and Ejectment, including the Common Pleas and Exchequer. Eleventh Edition. By SAMUEL PRENTICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. In Two Volumes. 1862.

[Sweet; V. & R. Stevens, Sons, & Haynes.]

Forms of Practical Proceedings in the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer of Pleas; with Notes and Observations thereon. By THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple. Ninth Edition. 1862.

[Sweet; V. & R. Stevens, Sons, & Haynes.]

THE first of the above works occupies much the same place in the present generation as Tidd's Practice did in the last. The book having reached an eleventh edition is a tolerable proof of this; and it is too well known, and its merit too fully recognised, to need much comment at our hands.

In the advertisement we are informed, that "the Common-law Procedure Act, 1860, the new enactments as to registering judgments and executions; the new act relating to attornies; the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, so far as it affects the practice of the superior courts; and all other enactments relating to the practice of such courts, are noticed in this edition. The 22 & 23 Vict. c. 63, the act for remitting cases for the opinion of Courts in her Majesty's dominions, will be found in part 13. The cases decided by the Courts down to the time of publication are referred to."

In part 13, here mentioned, we find the statute referred to, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 63. But there is another, of even greater importance, bearing on the same subject, namely, the 24 Vict. c. 11, intitled "An Act to afford Facilities for the better Ascertainment of the Law of Foreign Countries when pleaded in Courts within her Majesty's Dominions." This latter statute is only slightly noticed, and that in a note at p. 1752. We think it might have been set out with advantage.

More should have been said in this book relative to the power of a judge at Nisi Prius to discharge the jury in the event of their not agreeing, &c. Reg. v. Charlesworth (1 B. & S. 460) contains almost all the law on this subject, and although a criminal case might have been cited with advantage.

The latter of these works is a well-known collection of forms, and usually accompanies the former. The cases referred to in the notes being very numerous, it appears to us that a table of them would be an improvement.

WHARTON'S LAW LEXICON.—Second Edition.

In royal 8vo., 1860, price 11. 5s.

THE LAW LEXICON; or, DICTIONARY OF JURISPRUDENCE; explaining the Technical Words and Phrases employed in the several Departments of English Law; including the various Legal Terms used in Commercial Transactions. Together with an Explanatory as well as Literal Translation of the Latin Maxims contained in the Writings of the Ancient and Modern Commentators. By J. B. WHARTON, Esq., M.A., Oxon, Barrister at Law, Author of "The Articled Clerk's Manual," &c. Second Edition, enlarged.

"The task was one of the utmost difficulty, and, upon the whole, Mr. Wharton has achieved it in a creditable manner. Law students will find it of the utmost utility, for there is scarcely any subject relating to law on which they may not here obtain useful information, or, at all events, a hint as to where to look for it. . . . We must not omit to notice the very large number of legal maxims which the book contains. They are always accompanied by a good translation, and sometimes by illustrations of the manner in which they have been applied. Articled clerks, who have not had the benefit of a complete classical education, will be thankful to Mr. Wharton for the manner in which he has discharged this part of his task."—Solicitors' Journal, Jan. 7, 1860.

"Mr. Wharton did not undertake a superfluous toil when he imposed upon himself the enormous labour of getting up a new Law Dictionary, or, as he prefers to call it, a Law Lexicon. The proof that it was wanted, and that he has succeeded in supplying the want, is found in the fact that a second edition has been called for. In this he has introduced many corrections of errors, unavoidable in so large a labour, and numerous additions suggested by readers, as well as by his own researches; and it may now be pronounced the most complete Law Dictionary we possess, and therefore entitled to preference by all who purpose to add that useful and almost indispensable book of reference to their libraries."—Law Times, Feb. 11, 1860.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 31, 1863.

AMONGST the numerous real improvements in our system of jurisprudence which have taken place of late years, the first rank, perhaps, may be accorded to that by which our courts of law and equity are being gradually rendered independent of each other, and enabled to do complete justice in almost every cause brought before them.

The fusion of law and equity, though far advanced, is not complete; but it is to be hoped that during the next session the Lord Chancellor will be enabled to take another step in the right direction. Opinions naturally differ as to the extent to which fusion should be extended. Some would carry it out to its fullest extent, would have the same mode of procedure to every court, and would entirely abolish every distinction between courts of law and courts of equity; in fact, leaving parties in every case liberty to bring it before any court, whatever may be the nature of the litigation, or the subject-matter in dispute. Such a complete change, however, is not likely to be made suddenly; the assimilating process has been going on gradually for some years, and will still continue to advance, but we are inclined to think that no advantage would be gained by a sudden change—by throwing open every court for the admission of every kind of business, which had previously been transacted solely in others.

By the use of equitable pleas and replications, on, perhaps, a rather more extensive scale than at present, it would be unnecessary to apply for injunctions in equity to stay proceedings at law. By interrogatories at law for the examination of the parties, bills of discovery in equity, as supplemental to proceedings at law, ought to be rendered quite unnecessary. The power of granting injunctions at law, in all cases where legal rights are in dispute, ought to enable courts of law, if it does not now do so, to render complete justice without the assistance of courts of equity.

Where, however, the different courts of law can do complete justice in the cases before them, there seems to be no more inconvenience in allotting a particular kind of business to courts of equity, and a different kind to courts of law, than there is in allotting the Admiralty business to the courts presided over by Dr. Lushington, and the Probate and Matrimonial and Divorce Cases to Sir Cresswell Cresswell.

The procedure and practice, both in the courts of common law and in courts of equity, have of late years, doubtless, been greatly improved. The scandalous delays in Chancery, the multiplication of steps in a suit, for the purpose of increasing the number of fees payable formerly to the officers of the court, were fully exposed by the Chancery Commission; and, to a great extent, though not fully, remedied upon its recommendation. Thus still there remains much to be done. There are delays of unnecessary length still in Chancery; costs and expenses are incurred, which, though small in comparison to those which ruined unfortunate suitors during the procrastinating reign of Lord Eldon, are still formidable, and might, we are fully persuaded, be reduced.

Again: there is a large class of cases where equitable relief is necessary, but a recourse to equity as at present administered either inflicts inevitable ruin upon some or perhaps all of the parties, or it necessarily devours, as the price of the decision, the subject-matter of litigation. Surely some mode might be found for disposing of such cases cheaply and satisfactorily. Judges in Chancery are always disposed to rebuke those who bring before them cases where the matter in dispute is of small value, forgetting that at present their own court is the only place where some disputes, though only relating to little matters, can be settled—where trustees can be relieved from the liabilities consequent upon making a wrong distribution, or a party entitled to purely equitable relief can obtain it. It is true, that under the Chancery Amendment Acts, and the Acts of Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., and Lord St. Leonards, the opinion of the Court can be obtained in a very summary mode; that relief may be got by a simple summons at chambers in cases where formerly all the formalities of a regular suit must have been gone through before the same end could have been attained; but, notwithstanding all this, there are many, very many, cases where even this simplified mode of procedure occasions an expense which is either utterly out of proportion to the advantage to be gained, or is so great as to render any advantage impossible.

There is a large class of cases, we are convinced, might be disposed of just as well in a county court as by the Court of Chancery. Suppose A. contracts to take a lease of land from B. for seven years, at 80*l.* rent, or to purchase land from him for, say, 200*l.*, might not a county court be intrusted with the power to decree specific performance of such contracts? A. mortgages to B. a small tenement for 200*l.*—why should not a county court be enabled to make a decree for redemption or foreclosure, just as well as a court of equity in London? A person dies in the country leaving assets to a small amount to be administered—why should they not be administered by the judge already intrusted with the power of administering the same estate if the deceased had been bankrupt?

Suppose, again, a difficult question to arise, whether a legacy of 50*l.* is vested or contingent, might not some mode be devised by which executors could safely pay it, without having recourse to the Court of Chancery? Might not the opinion of certain official counsel—such, for instance, as one of the counsel of the court, or of one of some more numerous body to be designated by the Lord Chancellor—upon a case submitted to, and an opinion obtained from, him, in the same manner as it is now submitted to and obtained (barring the arguments of counsel) from the Court, be a sufficient indemnity to the executors acting upon such opinion?

The great advantage, in matters of small amount, of giving jurisdiction to the county courts, is, that in most cases one professional man would be sufficient, whilst, on the other hand, in cases coming from the country, country solicitors, town solicitors, and counsel are necessarily employed; and the expense and delay consequent upon all business going through three different mediums before it arrives coram judice, may be imagined by all, and, to their grief, has been experienced by many.

Again: may not the proceedings of the Court of Chancery be in many ways improved and simplified, both with the view of preventing litigation, or when inevitable, of rendering it less costly?

Might not, for instance, in a very great many more cases than at present, the parties come before the Court with all the materials ready for a final decision, and thus prevent the delay and cost of a reference to chambers, and a hearing on further consideration?

Might not some of the rules of the Court of Chancery, which have at least a tendency to increase unnecessary litigation, be altered without any detriment to the administration of justice? Take, for instance, that rule by which the residue of a testator's estate is made to pay the costs of construing certain parts of his will in which the residuary legatee takes no interest.

By a judicial fiction, the testator having caused, by using inapt words, the alleged difficulty in determining what he means, it is said that his estate ought to pay the expenses of the litigation occasioned thereby. Now, we cannot but think that it is a great hardship upon the owner of the residue (not the testator) but A., that he must pay for the determining whether B. or C. are entitled to a fund in which he, A., has no interest; and it is very obvious, where two or more persons can enjoy the luxury of litigation at the expense of a third party, that there will, at least, be a tendency to bring all those cases before the Court of Chancery, and no lack of advisers to recommend the adoption of such course, when, without such a convenient fund, matters might, without having recourse to extreme measures, have been arranged to the satisfaction of all concerned.

With regard to the procedure of the Court of Chancery, it must be admitted that Lord Chelmsford, by the consolidation of the General Orders of the Court, under the able superintendence of Mr. Josiah Smith and Mr. Cadman Jones, did much for its improvement, but the next step which obviously ought to be taken, is to form a code of practice, by embodying therein, in logical order, the various acts of Parliament, General, Consolidated, and other Orders, decisions, and practice of the Court of Chancery. If an attempt even to produce a code were made, it would bring to light many anomalies and inconveniences of the present practice, which might be easily and effectually remedied. Compare the procedure of the English Court of Chancery, as it is found in the very useful book of Mr. Osborne Morgan, with the French Code of Civil Procedure; and we shall see that the contrast between the two is as strong as between order and disorder, light and darkness.

Whatever difficulties may lie in the way of forming a code of substantive law, there are none of an insurmountable character in forming a code of procedure. The authors of the Consolidated Orders have shewn what may be done with reference to a code of procedure, and there is no doubt, that with very little more labour they might, had they been so instructed to do, have framed a code of Chancery procedure, embracing within its sections the whole practice of the Court, derived from every available source.

If such a task were undertaken, and well performed, it might tend in a very great degree to the assimilation of the procedure of the courts of law and equity. The practice of the Court of Chancery would cease to be what it now is, save to its own practitioners, an inscrutable mystery; and while Chancery procedure might borrow some useful hints from the courts of law, the courts of law, on the other hand, might, to a still greater extent, derive improvement by borrowing largely from the procedure and machinery of the Court of Chancery.

SUCCESSION DUTY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The perplexities attendant upon the construction of the main clauses of the Succession Duty Act have been already discussed in two of your leading articles (7 Jur., N. S., part 2, pp. 491, 507), to which I ventured to add a few remarks in the same volume (p. 537); and I drew your attention to the case of The Attorney-General v. Floyer and Seymer (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1062). It will be seen from THE JURIST of the 10th instant, that the decision in that case, in which an appointee, under the exercise of a joint power limited to themselves on barring the entail by tenant for life and tenant in tail male in remainder, was held, by the learned judges of the Court of Exchequer, to take a succession from the said appointees equally, has been reversed by the House of Lords. That all the cases in which powers of appointment have been created and exercised, and questions thereupon as to succession duty have arisen and been decided, could have been reconciled, was impossible; but it is by no means clear to my mind that Lord Campbell would have acquiesced in the reversal of the judgment of the Court of Exchequer in the case in question, although it was the authority of Lord Braybrooke v. The Attorney-General (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 741), decided by the House of Lords during the Chanceryship of Lord Campbell, that was held to govern the case. In delivering his judgment, the then Lord Chancellor expressed himself as follows:—"The question has been asked, what would have been the effect of the joint power of appointment being executed in favour of a stranger? That stranger, on taking the succession, would have been in a totally different position from the appellant; and as he would clearly have taken under the disposition of others, the duty to be paid by him would depend upon totally different considerations" (p. 743). Now, it is indisputable, that George Bankes and Edmund George Bankes respectively took in no other character than as strangers in respect of the disposition made by Henry Bankes and John William Bankes.

It would have been difficult for Lord Cranworth, who disposes of In re Jenkinson (24 Beav. 64) as a case of valuable consideration for a power to charge, to reconcile with his judgment the dicta at the Rolls, In re Ramsay, to which I referred (p. 537)—"If Lady Ramsay had exercised that power (a general power), and the petitioners had taken as appointees from her, and not under the ultimate trusts of the settlement, then I should have been of opinion that she would have been the predecessor." The respective positions of George Bankes and Edmund George Bankes might have appeared different to the mind of Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., if I can gather any argument by analogy from the judgment of his Lordship in Re Lovelace (5 Jur., N. S., part 1, pp. 428, 694), in which, with reference to a possible conflict between the 2nd and 4th sections of the Succession Duty Act, his Lordship remarks (p. 696), "But this difficulty is, I think, more seeming than substantial; for I apprehend that the express provision of the 4th section, that the donee of a power should be a successor, would, in the cases in which it applied, override the general provision of the 2nd section, placing the appointee in that position." The Lord Justice then proceeds to state, that "taking effect," in the 4th section, refers to the power, and not to the instrument creating it, as Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., had determined; and his Lordship thus concludes—" . . . ; and it is for this reason that I think the case does not fall within the 4th section, the power having come into operation on the death of Mr. Lovelace, who died before the passing of the act." Now, in the case of George Bankes, the power came into operation, in this sense, on the suffering of the recovery in 1810; but, in the case of Edmund George Bankes, the disentailing deed was dated the 2nd July, 1855, subsequently to the Succession Duty Act; and thereupon the power came into operation. In the same sense, in the case of In re Barker et Ux. (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1061), the power came into operation in 1850. Now, I must not be understood to argue that the powers in The Attorney-General v. Floyer and Seymer were exactly similar to those in the cases of In re Lovelace and In re Barker et Ux., or within the 4th section, although I must admit that the construction put upon the words of that section by Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., seems more in accordance with ordinary grammatical rules than that of the Lord Justice. The learned Vice-Chancellor thought that the 2nd section standing alone, might include appointees, but, when followed by the 4th section, could not be reasonably held to do so; but he contracted the operation of the 4th section by understanding "taking effect" in a legal instead of a popular sense. Whatever may be the effect of this section, I think it must be admitted, that for the purposes of the act, a conversion of powers executed into property was intended; but I do not at all think that the decisions have been in that direction. I am treating, of course, of general powers. Let the spirit of the 4th section be observed in the construction of the 2nd; for, if it be just, under circumstances coming within the 4th section, that appointors should be successors, it is equally so, under circumstances coming within the 2nd section, that appointors should be predecessors. It is not, however, a matter calculated to excite our wonder, that so Titanic a grasp of thought as the Succession Duty Act undoubtedly displays should be not less evidenced, here and there, by fragmentary ideas lying about the sections.

Your obedient servant,
Rolls-chambers, Chancery-lane. G. L.
Jan. 23, 1863.

[Although we do not quite agree with our correspondent in his estimate of the ability displayed in the framing of the act, we agree with him in thinking that the case of The Attorney-General v. Floyer cannot be reconciled with the authorities, or with the design of the act. It seems very clear to us that the decision of the majority of the Lords in Lord Braybrooke v. The Attorney-General (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 741), upon which Lord Cranworth relied, and by which Lord Wensleydale felt bound, has no bearing on the point in The Attorney-General v. Floyer. In the earlier case the estates were originally settled by the will of Lord Howard de Walden upon his cousin R. N. for life, with remainder in effect to R. N.'s son, R. C. N., in tail. The father and son suffered a recovery, and resettled the estates (subject to the father's life estate), to such uses as they should jointly appoint; and an appointment was made under which R. C. N. took a life estate. It was held, that on the death of R. N., R. C. N. must pay as on a succession from his cousin, the testator; and this was according to the express provision of the act (sect. 12), that the disposition of a reversion in favour of the reversioner himself shall not operate to deprive the State of the duty which would have been payable if no such disposition had been made. But in The Attorney-General v. Floyer the case was different. There H. B., tenant for life, and W. J. B., his eldest son, tenant in tail in remainder, barred the entail, and reserved to themselves a joint power under which, before the passing of the act, they limited the estate to the father and son successively for life, with remainders to the issue of the son which failed, with remainder to George B., another son of H. B., in tail. It was held by the Court of Exchequer, that on the death of the surviving tenant for life, George B. must pay duty as on a succession from his father and brother in equal moieties, according to the provision in sect. 13 of the act, for the case of a succession derived from several predecessors, the proportional interest derived from each not being distinguishable. We cannot doubt that this decision was right, and that the question in Lord Braybrooke's case did not arise. In that case, the will of Lord Howard de Walden had given a succession to take effect on the death of R. N.; and it was held, according to the express provision of the act, that the taker of that succession must pay duty as on a succession under the will. In Floyer's case, neither George B., nor any person claiming under him, was at any time after the passing of the act (see sect. 15) entitled to a life estate under the settlement—the only title which he had at or after the passing of the act was a title given him by an appointment made by his father and his brother, under a power which made them absolute owners of the estate. Lord Cranworth's remarks on Lord Braybrooke's case are founded on a misconception of the principle of the decision, which did not proceed upon the ground that R. C. N. took his succession wholly from himself, but on the ground that the succession which he took was derived from his cousin.

Two other questions arose in the same case, and were decided (against the opinion of the Court of Exchequer) in accordance with Lord Braybrooke's case. G. B. being tenant for life, and E. G. B. tenant in tail in remainder, resettled the estate in 1856 (after the Succession Duty Act came into operation), to such uses as the two should jointly appoint, and then appointed them in effect to the use of G. B. for life, with remainder to trustees for a term of 500 years, upon trust to pay an annuity to E. G. B. if he should survive G. B.; and also to raise portions for G. B.'s younger children as G. B. should appoint. G. B. appointed portions under the power. It was held, that succession duty at 3l. per cent. was payable both on the annuity and on the portions. The Court of Exchequer had held that the duty should be at the rate of 1l. per cent. on the portions and on one-half of the annuity, and at 3l. per cent. on the other half of the annuity. We think that the duty should have been at 1l. per cent. on one-half both of the annuity and of the portions, and at 3l. per cent. on the other half of each. They were both created by a disposition by E. G. B. of his succession of an estate tail which he derived under a settlement, made before the passing of the act, by his father and his uncle.]

ORDER OF COURT.

THE following Order of Court has just been issued:—Whereas, by the 5th of the Consolidated Orders of the High Court of Chancery, rule 4, article 1, it is provided, that the Easter Vacation is to commence and terminate on such days as the Lord Chancellor shall every year specially direct: Now, I do hereby order that the Easter Vacation for the present year shall commence on Monday, the 30th March, and terminate on Wednesday, the 8th April, both days inclusive.

WESTBURY, C.

JUDGES' CHAMBERS.

(From the Solicitor's Journal.)

I INVITE your attention to the present mode of transacting business at the judges' chambers, and the fearful loss of time consequent thereupon.

The best way of illustrating the evil complained of will be to describe an afternoon "at chambers," say yesterday afternoon, for one day, unhappily, varies but little from another. My summons yesterday was returnable, as usual, at three o'clock. We first meet in an outer chamber, where we are penned up for half an hour, and nearly stifled in the midst of a crowd of clerks and boys shouting and bawling in all manner of tones and keys. At about half-past three o'clock parties are admitted into the judge's private room, usually two or three only at a time. Yesterday, for a change, no order was observed, and the judge's "private" room, from soon after three o'clock until six o'clock, was thronged with not less than from twenty to thirty persons at one time, all waiting to make their applications. In my case four parties were in attendance, and we were kept waiting from three o'clock until more than half-past five o'clock before our number was reached; and after our case was heard and disposed of there were still others remaining to be heard. Nearly three hours were thus wasted before our case was reached. Multiply these three hours by the hundreds of cases heard every day in the three chambers, and some idea may be formed of the frightful waste of time occasioned by the present system. Clients' pockets must pay for this in one shape or another. But the waste of time is not the only evil: a failure of justice frequently ensues as a natural consequence of the system. The judges get wearied and irritated by the constant repetition of frivolous arguments on all sorts of frivolous points, and are sometimes thus rendered unfit to deal with matters of more importance in a judicial frame of mind.

Another evil is, that clerks acquire habits of lounging about, and wasting the time of their principals in idle chatter and gossip, to the utter destruction of proper business-like habits. The remedy for this state of things is obvious: let one of the Masters of each court—the Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer—attend at the respective chambers of the judges, and hear and dispose of all simple summonses and applications, such as for time to plead, and the like.

This course is occasionally adopted when there is only one judge in attendance for the three courts, but there is no reason why it should not be permanently acted upon. There are four or five Masters to each court, well paid, not over-worked, and perfectly competent to discharge these duties, and I believe, as far, at least, as most of them are concerned, perfectly willing to do so.

JURIDICAL SOCIETY.—A meeting of this society took place at its rooms, No. 4, St. Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square, on Monday evening, the 26th instant, C. Clerk, Esq., in the chair; when it was moved by Mr. W. M. Best, and seconded by Mr. Worsley, "That a committee be appointed to co-operate with the committee of the Law Amendment Society, corresponding with the Berlin Committee for the purpose of establishing a foundation in honour of Savigny." Mr. Westlake moved as an amendment, which was seconded by Mr. Pulman, and carried, "That the secretaries be instructed to give renewed notice to the members of the existence and objects of the committee for the Savigny foundation, and that they will receive and forward the names of any members of the Juridical Society who may wish to join the committee." The adjourned discussion on the question brought before the society by Mr. Worsley at the previous meeting, "Our present treatment of criminals," was then resumed by Mr. W. M. Best. Mr. W. Cunningham Glen, Mr. Westlake, and Mr. F. Lawrence spoke on the question; and Mr. Worsley replied.

EXAMINATIONS AT THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

HILARY TERM, 1863.

AT the examination of candidates for admission on the roll of attorneys and solicitors of the Superior Courts, the Examiners recommended the following gentlemen, under the age of twenty-six, as being entitled to honorary distinction:—

1. Cartmell Harrison, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. Thomas Harrison, of Kendal, and Mr. Thomas Johnston, of London.

2. James Hartley John, aged twenty-four, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Corser & Fowler, of Wolverhampton, and Messrs. Miller & Smith, of London.

3. Alexander Bruce Dennistoun Sword, the younger, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Whitworth, of Manchester, and Messrs. Gregory & Rowcliffes, of London.

4. John Woodcock, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Thomas Woodcock, of Haslingden, and Messrs. Holgate & Roberts, of Rochdale.

5. Albert Kaye Rollit, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. John Rollit, of Hull.

The Council of the Incorporated Law Society have accordingly awarded the following prizes of books:—

To Mr. Harrison, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clifford's Inn.

To Mr. John, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clement's Inn.

To Mr. Sword, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society.

To Mr. Woodcock, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society.

To Mr. Rollit, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society.

The Examiners have also certified that the following candidates, whose names are placed in alphabetical order, passed examinations which entitle them to commendation:—

Thomas Beaumont, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. William Ansell Day, Mr. William Reynolds Prideaux, and Messrs. Smale & Torr, of London.

Henry Cadman the younger, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Carr, of Gomersal, near Leeds.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 7, 1863.

IN a recent number (ante, p. 20), when noticing the case of Kennedy v. Broun, we entertained a hope that we should have, if not a total exemption from bar scandals for the future, at least a temporary respite from them. In that hope we have, however, been sadly disappointed, as will be seen from the following report of certain proceedings at the Middlesex Sessions, which is taken from The Iron Times of Wednesday, the 21st January. Most of the italics are our own:—

"James Barry was charged with stealing lead.

"Mr. Cooper appeared for the prosecution; Mr. Dickie for the prisoner.

"The foreman of the prosecutors, in answer to questions put by the counsel for the prisoner, said that he had given no instructions to any one to prosecute.

"Mr. Cooper said that he was instructed by an attorney named 'Jay.' The brief was delivered to his clerk Soper.

"Soper said the brief was delivered to him by a man named Littlewood, but upon being called no one answered to that name.

"The Assistant Judge said that Soper before had been guilty of misconduct, and he should disallow the costs.

"At a later period of the day Mr. Cooper applied that the case of Abraham Walton might not be taken to-day.

"The Assistant Judge said that he had before him two notices from different attorneys to prosecute—one from Jay and the other from Doughty.

"Mr. Cooper said that he did not know how to act; he was instructed by Mr. Doughty.

"The clerk of the court.—I do not find Mr. Doughty's name in the Law List.

"Soper, Mr. Cooper's clerk, here came in, and, in an officious manner, marshalled the prosecutrix up the court.

"The Assistant Judge said that Soper seemed to be acting in a very strange manner, not at all like a barrister's clerk.

"Soper, in an impertinent manner, replied that he thought he was acting quite properly and professionally.

"The Assistant Judge observed, that if Soper was not more respectful, he should order him out of court.

"Soper replied that he might do as he chose; he did no more than other clerks.

"The Assistant Judge then directed that Soper be not admitted inside the precincts of the court.

"Mr. Ribton observed that Mr. Cooper's clerk had committed all sorts of irregularities, and that when complaints were made against Soper, Mr. Cooper had put his fist in the gentleman's face who had complained, and threatened him with personal violence.

"Mr. Cooper here arose, and, in a very excited manner, said to Mr. Ribton—It is a lie! You are a vulgar-minded hound, and a contemptible hound!

"Mr. Ribton said he should not pay any attention to any vulgar abuse Mr. Cooper might say in court. He should treat it with contempt.

"The altercation continued for some minutes, and a scene disgraceful in the extreme ensued.

"The Court hoped, that after the heat of passion had passed, Mr. Cooper would apologise for the words he had used.

"Mr. Cooper said that he would apologise to the Court willingly, but that he could not, after the great provocation he had received from a certain individual, apologise to him.

"Mr. Ribton said, that since the transaction he alluded to before—namely, Mr. Cooper putting his fist in a brother barrister's face—he had not spoken to him. The conduct of Soper had been very bad.

"Mr. Cooper said that Mr. Ribton's statement was utterly false, every word of it. Soper had a good character from Mr. Pitt Taylor and from Montague Chambers, Q. C., and he (Mr. Cooper) could get a character from the Norfolk Circuit. His clerk was made a scapegoat. Complaints had been made against Mr. Ribton's clerk.

"Mr. Ribton.—That is an unqualified falsehood.

"Mr. Cooper.—You tell a gross falsehood, and your white face shows that you know it.

"Mr. Ribton said he could not stand such language.

"Mr. Bodkin said he must stop this altercation. He hoped the Bar would take the matter up."

We have no desire to enter upon the question which gave rise to this disgraceful scene, namely, whether Mr. Cooper's clerk was or was not guilty of irregular conduct; or, supposing the affirmative, whether that conduct was with or without the connivance of his master. We shall merely take up the transaction at the point when Mr. Ribton, in a manner apparently uncalled for, thrust himself into it; from which moment both parties forgot not only all respect for the tribunal, and all regard for professional courtesy, but the most ordinary rules of decorum. And their conduct is aggravated by the circumstance, that both are of considerable standing at the bar, one of them being, we believe, the senior practitioner at those sessions. Nor is this all. Mr. Cooper has been for many years a revising barrister, and from having consequently so often discharged the functions of a judge, ought to know and feel what is due to any tribunal before which he is practising. Mr. Ribton also, if our memory does not mislead us, has recently addressed a constituency, with the view of adding a unit to the collective wisdom of the Legislature. But the scene before us shews that his education for the House of Commons is yet deplorably defective. No assembly that has any respect for itself would allow of language similar to that addressed by him on the present occasion to Mr. Cooper; and if he had used it in the House of Commons, he would in a very few minutes have found himself in the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms.

The members of the Bar who engaged in this unseemly contest are not, however, the only parties to blame. What must be said of the judge, especially a judge of Mr. Bodkin's experience, who sat and listened to the above foul and disgusting language, without visiting it with instant reproof and punishment? Far, however, from taking this course, Mr. Bodkin merely says that he must stop the altercation, which had already lasted some time, and mildly expresses a hope that "the Bar would take the matter up." But where was that Bar? At the Middlesex Sessions there is no Bar mess; and we believe one of the combatants is its leader: added to which, they belong to different circuits. It is whispered, indeed, that the Benchers of Lincoln's-inn, of which both the learned persons in question are members, intend to inquire into the matter.

But suppose that this affair had occurred on circuit, or other place where there was a tribunal of the Bar at hand to take cognisance of professional misconduct, was the matter one exclusively for that tribunal? We should say most certainly not. The Court, in whose presence the misconduct was committed, should have looked on it in its true light, as a disrespect to the tribunal, and an insult to the majesty of justice, and as such should have punished it instantly by severe reprimand, if not by fine or committal.

It may be thought by some that it would have been more judicious in us to have allowed this disgusting altercation to pass without notice, especially as it took place before a tribunal which is not only of an inferior order, but one which has never been conspicuous for courtesy of manner, or over observance of decorum. But we have not acted without due deliberation. A report of the scene having appeared in some of the public prints, absolute suppression of it is impossible, even if desirable; for it is by no means clear to us, that when conduct of this kind is allowed to pass uncensured by those whose duty it was to notice it in the first instance, publicity is also to be withheld, in order to render the impunity of its authors more complete, and stimulate others to copy their evil example. Besides, it may not be generally known that the eminent foreign jurists, so many of whom visit our shores for the purpose of studying our laws and institutions, attend very constantly in our criminal courts, especially the Central Criminal Court, the Middlesex Sessions, &c., in order to observe the working of our jury system. It is not only possible, but very probable, that there were some such foreigners present among the audience at the above disgraceful scene; and it is needless to observe how grievously the English Bar, English tribunals, and England itself, must have suffered in their estimation. Nay, more; the pens of such foreigners are as busy as their eyes and ears; and we put it to any Englishman, what would be his feelings if he saw a report of the above scene, in French or German, circulated in legal periodicals on the continent. We hope that the rumour of the interference of Lincoln's-inn is not unfounded; if it is, the consequence will be that this affair will be hushed up, as many others have been, to the disgrace alike of the Profession and of the administration of justice in this land.

W. H. Willes, Esq., formerly County Court Judge of Circuit No. 1 (Northumberland, &c.), and whose transference to Circuit No. 54 (Bristol, &c.) we very recently noticed (ante, p. 22), has died suddenly, having sat in his new judicial seat only once or twice.

INADEQUATE PUNISHMENT FOR PERSONAL VIOLENCE.

WE insert the following letter to The Times, which press of matter has hitherto prevented our noticing:—

“Sir,—If you think the cause of justice will in any way be aided by calling further attention to the savage assault case brought before the Thames Police-court on Saturday, I shall feel greatly obliged if you will allow me to make a few remarks on the subject.

According to the report, a fellow, described as a thief and a ruffian, struck the complainant, a young woman, a desperate blow on the head, which felled her to the ground, and then kicked her on the head till she was senseless; and she remained in that condition for some time; so that, in point of fact, she was almost kicked to death. She was taken to a surgeon, who dressed a severe wound on her head; and the poor thing, under proper treatment, recovered sufficiently to attend and give her evidence. The police, who, unfortunately, are but too well accustomed to scenes of brutality, described the assault as ‘a most atrocious one,’ and the punishment awarded was six weeks’ imprisonment, with hard labour; which means just enough exercise to keep the savage in health, develop the muscular system, and six weeks’ excellent feeding. A dreadfully merciful system!

Surely it is time to revise our correctional code, so as to define and limit the power of police magistrates, for some of them seem to defy observation, and to smile at rebuke.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,
Dec. 29.

GEORGE ELLIS.”

We wish we could believe that this case stood alone; but long observation of the conduct of our police magistrates forbids us to entertain any such pleasing illusion.

Perhaps, however, these functionaries are not the only parties to blame. The inferior officers of a Government usually act in the spirit of their superiors; and the examples of imbecility, credulity, and mistaken humanity displayed towards criminals, both by our legislators and the executive, may well be pleaded by our police magistrates as excuses for similar conduct on their part.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

HILARY TERM, 26 VICT.—Jan. 28, 1863.

This Court will hold sittings on Monday, the 9th, Tuesday the 10th, Wednesday the 11th, Thursday the 12th, Friday the 13th, and Saturday the 14th days of February next, and will at such sittings proceed in disposing of the business then pending in the paper of New Trials and in the Special Paper, and in giving judgment in matters then standing for judgment.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 14, 1863.

PARLIAMENT assembled on the 5th instant, as announced, but has not hitherto presented much to attract the attention of the Profession. Law reform is not alluded to in the Royal Speech, and the Ministers of the Crown have not brought forward any large measures on the subject. It is not, indeed, altogether in abeyance, for there have been some important announcements. The first and principal of these was made on the occasion of a motion by Sir George Bowyer, to bring in a bill to amend the law regarding the jurisdiction and authority exercised by the Inns of Court, who stated that it was similar to that introduced by him last session. On this, the Solicitor-General said that he did not oppose the introduction of the bill, but he desired it to be understood, that if any measure should be agreed upon, and presented to the House by the Benchers of the Inns of Court, neither private members nor the Government should be held to be precluded from considering such a measure. He was in a position to inform the House that communications had taken place between the Benchers of the different Inns upon this subject, and he was not without hope that the result would be the adoption of some measure which might be recommended to the House by their unanimous assent. Those communications had not yet advanced far enough to enable him to say whether such would be their result, but if anything were done his honourable friend would have early information of it, and he hoped that the second reading of this bill would not be pressed on so as to interfere with the deliberations of the societies upon the subject. Sir Fitzroy Kelly expressed the hope, which common justice requires should be realised, that the second reading of the bill will not be taken at a time when members of the Bar, who are members of the House, are absent on circuit. We shall anxiously wait the issue of this matter. If Sir George Bowyer's bill contains the clauses in the former one, relative to the government and funds of the Inns of Court, we trust it will meet with the fate of its predecessor. If, however, as has been stated during the recess, those clauses are omitted, and that part only retained which relates to establishing a Council of Discipline, the bill well deserves consideration, although the principle is by no means beyond question. Some measure on this subject is, however, desirable, and if any doubt exists, the recent case of Hudson v. Slade ought to dispel it.

Next in order comes the law of bankruptcy and insolvency, respecting which we have the following interpellation and answer:—

Sir F. Kelly asked the Attorney-General whether it was the intention of her Majesty's Government to bring in a bill in the present session to amend the law of bankruptcy; and whether provision would be made in any such bill for the consolidation of the statutes of bankruptcy.

The Attorney-General said that the Government were not aware that there was any necessity for any material amendment of the law of bankruptcy. As regarded the administration of that law, experience had more and more convinced them of the expediency of certain alterations, which included the appointment, as originally proposed, of a chief judge. Such an appointment the Government would be prepared to propose to Parliament whenever there should appear to be a fair prospect of obtaining its sanction. With respect to the consolidation of the bankruptcy statutes, he was in a position to state that the attention of the Lord Chancellor had been directed to the subject, but he could not promise that any measure having that object would be introduced during the present session.

The following explanations have been given respecting the present treatment of convicts, the deplorable inefficiency and absurdity of which has of late become so disagreeably apparent:—

In the House of Lords,

Earl Stanhope said that he was informed that, pending the labours of the commission, the Secretary of State had taken some important steps with the view of mitigating the evil complained of. It was said that a circular had been issued to the chairmen of quarter sessions, and he thought it would be desirable that the noble earl should state the object of that document. He apprehended that it had been issued for the purpose of diminishing the number of convicts set free periodically, and he should like to know whether any calculation had been made, founded on statistics, as to what the diminution was likely to be. He now begged to ask his noble friend, Earl Granville, for information on those two points.

Earl Granville, in answer, thought it would be inconvenient to discuss a subject which had only just been referred to a commission. He should, therefore, confine himself to saying that a circular, such as that referred to by his noble friend, had been issued by the Home Office in regard to persons who were recommitted, having formerly been convicted of other offences. In the case of such persons, no expectation of a remission of any part of their sentence was to be held out. No other important step had been taken. In answer to the second inquiry of his noble friend, he had only to observe, that it would be impossible to say what number of persons were likely to be recommitted.

The Earl of Derby wished to ask whether a person who, having received a ticket-of-leave, which was only a conditional exemption from a portion of his sentence, was again recommitted before the time at which that sentence had expired would, in addition to the new sentence received by him after recommittal, have to go through what remained of the previous one. The intention of the law certainly was, that ticket-of-leave men found associating with thieves, or even leading a suspicious life, should forfeit their tickets and undergo the original sentence; but, except perhaps in Ireland, he did not believe that principle had been acted on in a single instance.

Earl Granville said, that in the country parts of Ireland a very strict police supervision had been observed in respect of ticket-of-leave men; but the fact that such a supervision had not been carried out in Dublin shewed the difficulty there was in giving effect to a system of that kind in large towns. His noble friend was, however, mistaken in thinking that there had been no case of the revocation of a ticket-of-leave in England. Recently ticket-of-leave men had been amenable for leading disorderly lives, keeping company with thieves, or committing offences of which the general law of the country was not exactly cognisant. In the case of a recommittal, he believed the custom had been to include the entire punishment in the second sentence.

The Earl of Derby observed that, in accordance with that custom, a convict who had received a sentence of ten years' imprisonment, and who obtained a ticket-of-leave after four years, leaving six years of his sentence unexpired, might derive a positive advantage from a second sentence, which would wipe out six years of the first.

The Duke of Marlborough said that recently in the public journals, in a notice of the convict establishment at Portland, it was stated that Redpath, who in 1857 was sentenced to transportation for life, was now at liberty on a ticket-of-leave, and probably was living on the proceeds of his felony. Their lordships would remember that this man was convicted of the most enormous forgeries on record. In sentencing him, the judge, in the course of some very impressive remarks, said that the prisoner was evidently a hardened criminal, far advanced in the practice of crime, and the sentence on him was transportation for life. He wished to know whether there was any truth in the statement, that Redpath had been discharged on a ticket-of-leave, for if so, the law must be in an absurdly inefficient state, and loudly cried for some remedy.

Earl Granville said that he could not enter into the details of any individual case without previous notice, but he would make it his business to inquire into the truth of the statement alluded to. He thought the noble duke, however, was wrong in supposing that Redpath was now at large upon a ticket-of-leave. The man had been transported for life, and was still in the colony, though he might have a ticket-of-leave.

Lord Cranworth said that Redpath, having been sentenced to transportation for life, was sent out of the country accordingly. It was well known that, after being in the colony for some time, a convict who conducted himself satisfactorily received a ticket-of-leave, and Redpath might be at large in this way, &c.

The subject was also thus referred to in the House of Commons:—

Mr. Garnett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he would lay upon the table of the House the circular, dated the 27th January, 1863, addressed to judges, &c., stating that the regulations as to remission of sentence set forth in the circular of the 27th June, 1857, should not apply to persons sentenced for a second time to penal servitude; and whether any instructions had been lately issued to the convict prisons, as to making convicts about to be liberated on license known to the police; and if so, whether they also could be laid before Parliament.

Sir G. Grey said there was no objection to the production of the circular to which the hon. gentleman referred. In answer to his second question, he might state, that no general instructions had been issued having for their object the making of convicts about to be liberated on license, known to the police throughout the country. To do that would, he believed, be hardly possible. Instructions had, however, been issued, that certain officers of the metropolitan police should have an opportunity of seeing the prisoners at Millbank, with a view to their possessing greater facilities for the identification of those persons. The arrangements entered into for the purpose were at present suspended, in consequence of the inquiry now in progress, and it was deemed better that, before new regulations were made on the subject, an opportunity for an expression of opinion with respect to it, on the part of the Royal Commission, should be afforded.

The Government have also brought in a bill for the registration of births and deaths in Ireland. It has been suggested by some that "marriages" ought to be included, with the view of establishing one uniform marriage law for the United Kingdom. That subject, however, seems too wide and general to be treated in this incidental way, and at least may wait until the determination of the Yelverton case by the House of Lords.

Several bills by private members have also been announced. Among these, Sir John Trelawney has again brought forward his proposal for allowing affirmation instead of oaths in certain cases.

The present session of Parliament opens under peculiar circumstances. In the political atmosphere there is scarcely a breath stirring, and our legislators bid fair to have ample time on their hands. If this should continue, now will be the time for independent members to bring forward well-considered measures of law reform. We say emphatically, well-considered measures, for we have witnessed only too many of an opposite character, and such, when passed into law, introduce a remedy worse than the disease. We repeat, the opportunity for legal reform seems present, and we hope it will not be allowed to slip away.

ARRANGEMENT CLAUSES OF THE BANKRUPTCY ACT.

THE elaborate but characteristic judgment of the Lord Chancellor in the case of Ex parte Morgan, in re Woodhouse, delivered on the 30th ult., re-opens the vexed question of the power of a majority of creditors to bind the minority under the arrangement clauses of the Bankruptcy Act. It would, of course, have been improper for the Chancellor, in that judgment, to have alluded, even in the most remote degree, to any intention on his part to counteract, by any legislative interference, the (in his opinion) strange misunderstanding by the common-law judges of the plain meaning of two successive bankruptcy statutes; and it is therefore left open to conjecture whether the rumoured Bankruptcy Amendment Bill is or is not to contain clauses to prevent future doubt or misapprehension on this subject. Under these circumstances a retrospect of the efforts already made to amend the law in this respect, as well as the reasons for those efforts, may be attended with advantage, as it will then be easier to determine whether further amendment be or be not necessary.

The Bankruptcy Courts have always been unpopular with the commercial world; why or wherefore it is needless now curiously to inquire. A desire to avoid publicity for their own as well as their debtors' conduct may at times have prevailed with creditors; but that in bankruptcy much time was wasted, and lavish expense was fruitlessly incurred, and very little consideration had for the classes for whose presumed benefit the machinery of the courts was set in motion, it is impossible to deny. Whatever the causes may have been, it is a notorious fact, that in the great commercial crisis of 1847, out of 120 houses that suspended or stopped payment, only nine passed through the Court of Bankruptcy; and of these nine it was well known that the two largest were driven into the Gazette, contrary to the general wishes of very large majorities of creditors, because the partners very properly refused to allow creditors forming a most inconsiderable minority (who had brought actions) to obtain thereby a preference over other creditors. Thus, compositions and other modes of private arrangement between debtors and their creditors were the rule, and bankruptcy was the exception; but if dissentient creditors would stand out against the majority, payment in full of the dissentients or a general bankruptcy were the only alternatives.

This was, no doubt, and was felt to be, a grievance; and accordingly we are not surprised to discover, that in 1848 a committee of bankers, merchants, and traders in the city of London represented to Parliament, "that it would be very advantageous to the mercantile community, that in all cases of commercial insolvency, any mode of liquidation which should be approved of by a proper majority of the creditors, whether by trust, composition, inspection, or otherwise, should be binding on the rest; and that a small number of dissenting creditors should not be enabled to frustrate such mode of liquidation." It will be seen, that the words "composition, inspection, or otherwise," in this document, clearly refer to cases where the debtor's estate was not to be entirely distributed amongst the creditors; i. e. in technical language, to cases where there was to be no absolute "cessio bonorum." In truth, it had long become apparent in practice, that it was more advantageous for the creditors (as well as the debtor) to leave his property under his own control and management, than to vest it in trustees. If the debtor meant honestly by his creditors, his own efforts to retrieve his position would be the most successful; and if, on the contrary, he had recourse to renewed reckless speculation or extravagance, the penal clauses of the deed of arrangement could at once be put in force to prevent fresh creditors from sweeping away the entire estate; but in any case the debtor was to be trusted. Such (right or wrong) was the reasoning of the mercantile world; and the Legislature, as we now know, adopted it. In the Report of the Parliamentary Commission on Bankruptcy of 1854 we are told, that "clauses were introduced in the act of 1849, with the view of enabling the large majority of creditors to make arrangements with their debtor, which would bind the minority for the due distribution of his estate among them; but a construction has been put upon these clauses which has defeated in many cases the intentions of the framers of them; for the courts of law have excluded from their operation all arrangements by deed, which did not provide for the distribution of the entire estate of the trader for the payment of his debts."

These clauses were the 224th and following clauses of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, and the case of Telley v. Taylor, in the Exchequer Chamber (1 El. & Bl. 521), followed by Larper v. Bibby (5 H. L. C. 481), were the cases that put the construction upon them. Those cases decided that the words in sect. 224, "touching such trader's liabilities, and his release therefrom, and the distribution, inspection, conduct, management, and mode of winding-up of his estate," rendered it necessary for the deed of arrangement to provide for the distribution of his entire estate as well as his release; notwithstanding that the disjunctive words "all or any of such matters, or any matters having reference thereto," were the very next consecutive words of the sentence; and sects. 228 and 229, were assumed to favour that construction. And despite the above complaint of the commissioners of 1854, who were men not destitute of ability, or of knowledge of grammar, or of the law of bankruptcy, as will be evident when we give the names of Sir George Rose, C. T. Swanston, M. D. Hill, James Bacon, Edward Holroyd, Spencer H. Walpole, Edward Cooke, and George Carr Glynn, the courts of law adhered to Telley v. Taylor, and denied to the statutable majority of creditors any rights except to divide their debtor's entire estate amongst all his creditors. And this rule was actually carried out with such stringency, that if the deed excepted a man's clothes or his furniture, to the amount of 10*l.* or 20*l.*, it was held to be invalid (March v. Warwick, 1 H. & Norm. 164; Cooper v. Thornton, 1 El. & Bl. 544; and Snodin v. Boyce, 4 H. & Norm. 398); so that an assigning debtor was worse off, instead of better off, than a bankrupt. Bankruptcy was to be at a premium, arrangement by deed at a discount. In fact, out of the whole number of deeds framed since 1849, in reliance upon what was supposed and intended to be the meaning of the arrangement clauses of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, only two, as far as we are aware, viz. those in Macnaught v. Russell (1 H. & Norm. 611) and Irving v. Gray (3 H. & Norm. 34) have been upheld. And the more recent cases of Snodin v. Boyce (already cited); Legg v. Cheeseborough (5 C. B., N. S., 741); and Cruger v. Dunlop (7 H. & Norm. 525), in the Exchequer Chamber, must be taken to have greatly shaken, if not to have entirely overturned, the authority of even those two decisions.

Such was the state of the law when the Bankruptcy Act of 1861 was introduced. The commissioners of 1854 had strongly reported in favour of amended and enlarged clauses, and had especially recommended that the creditors and their debtor should be at liberty to settle and arrange their own compositions, trusts, and inspectorships in their own way, without the control or interference of the Court (of Bankruptcy), except so far as they might be desirous of submitting to it for the purpose of making it ancillary to their objects. The commercial community renewed their agitation to carry out the same object, and in Parliament it was stated that increased facility was to be given to deeds of arrangement. The result appeared in the 192nd and eight following sections of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134 (the Bankruptcy Act, 1861), together with the form given by Schedule (D.) of that act. As at this time the proportion of compositions and private arrangements to actual bankruptcies was as 10,000 to 1100, one of the new deeds under the new act was not long in finding its way into one of the common-law courts—and that Court the Court of Exchequer—wherein most of the former discussions of the same question under the former statute had taken place.

And the singular but disagreeable judgment of that Court was (see Walker v. Adcock, 8 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 519; 7 H. & Norm. 541), that the law under the new act was the same as the law under the old act; or, in other words, that a distribution of the debtor's entire estate amongst all his creditors was still essential to the validity of a deed of arrangement. In vain was it pointed out to them that the new act contained disjunctives, where the old act had conjunctives; and the intentions of the Legislature were again fruitlessly insisted on. Pollock, C. B., was of opinion, that "so great an alteration in the law should be stated in clear and unmistakable terms, and not, as here, contradicted by various portions of the act itself." Nor can it be doubted that a careful analysis of the sections in question does afford ample grounds for the conclusion at which the Court of Exchequer has arrived. But then comes the judgment of the Lord Chancellor in Ex parte Morgan, in re Woodhouse. His Lordship says, that he entirely dissents from Telley v. Taylor, but that it was the intention of the 192nd section of the new act to avoid just such results as would be the consequence of the decision in Telley v. Taylor; and also that it was clear that it was not required by sect. 192, that deeds which would be entitled to the benefit of that section should apply to the whole property of the debtor. He was of opinion that what was called in Telley v. Taylor a cessio bonorum, or the giving up of the entirety of the debtor's property, was not necessary to the validity of a deed of composition or trust, under sect. 192. The very object (he says) of the powers given in that section was to render it unnecessary to break up a debtor, and to save him from having all his property sold, his trade establishment broken up, and his existing status as a trader taken away.

Now, it is to be observed, that the judgment in Ex parte Morgan was based upon the fact of the exclusion in that case of certain creditors from the benefits of the deed, and the consequent invalidity of the deed; so that all the animadversions of the Lord Chancellor on Telley v. Taylor, and his remarks respecting the existing necessity of a cessio bonorum, are in the nature of "obiter dicta." It is also to be observed, that even in these obiter dicta, no attempt is made to answer the reasoning of the Court of Exchequer in Walker v. Adcock; but the whole rests on the "ipse dixit" of the Lord Chancellor. It was supposed that the Court of Exchequer Chamber would have been called upon, in a case of Foote v. Wood, heard on the 6th instant, to decide between the conflicting authorities (as they may popularly, though not strictly, be termed) of Walker v. Adcock and Ex parte Morgan, and to determine whether a cessio bonorum is or is not necessary under the existing law; but Foote v. Wood went off on a different point altogether.

Now, we have carefully reserved our own opinion on this subject; and it is possible that Lord Cranworth may have been right when he expressed his inability to see how a creditor for 100*l.*, or four creditors for 100*l.*, ought to have the power of deciding how one creditor for 300*l.* shall have his debt liquidated; but from what we have above written, two conclusions may be safely drawn. First, it is abundantly evident, that in two successive statutes the clear intention of the Legislature has been so imperfectly, or obscurely, or loosely expressed, that the judges of the land (who may or may not have their own opinions as to the wisdom of that intention, or the practicability of carrying it out) have professed themselves unable to give effect to it, although a great equity judge seems to disbelieve their professions, at the same time that he offers no reasons for his incredulity; and such a disagreement is not seemly. Secondly, a dead lock has been thereby created in legal and commercial circles, which ought to be put an end to as speedily as possible. Neither the conflict of opinion, nor the uncertainty and perplexity which must be the natural consequence of such a conflict, ought to be suffered to prevail for another week whilst Parliament is in session. We trust (not, we think, without reason) that the welfare of the community will be considered paramount, and that what is to be law on this subject will be shortly, clearly, and unmistakably embodied in the Bankrupt-law Amendment Act, which will probably be passed this session. Model deeds of composition, assignment, and inspec-torship would settle the question for ever, beyond the possibility of doubt or cavil.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Now that the management of criminals has become a subject of general interest, I trust you will not forget the part long since taken by THE JURIST on this question. In the years 1844 and 1845 you called attention to the plans proposed by the late Captain Maconochie for improving the management of criminals (8 Jur., part 2, p. 466; 9 Jur., part 2, pp. 89, 409); and you justly took credit for being, as you were, among the first of the journals devoted to jurisprudence who noticed this subject, referring at the same time to "an able paper in a contemporary legal periodical," The Law Magazine for August, 1845, as having also put the same system prominently before the public. The course of events tends strongly to shew that the principles on which this system is founded must ultimately prevail. But at present we appear to be in great danger of running into two extremes, either of which is likely to produce the most mischievous results.

On the one hand, there can be little doubt that strong efforts will be made to uphold and continue the present system, which still retains some warm and honest, though, I believe, greatly mistaken, advocates. The high diet, the gentle exercise, the shelter from every drop of rain, accorded to convicts in the Government prisons, will find defenders, absurd as is the contrast between the daily life of an honest working man and the life of persons ostensibly under punishment. Surely it requires little argument to shew that such a course of treatment is calculated neither to deter nor to reform.

But on the other hand, public opinion seems likely to rebound into a course of treatment which may lead to still greater evils. Bad as men may be, it is quite possible to make them worse; and if a system of continuous and hopeless severity should ever be re-established, the same ineffable horrors which have already existed under such a system will inevitably be reproduced.

It is said, with great truth, that the sentence of the judge, as pronounced, ought to be the very sentence actually inflicted. It is of the highest importance that the majesty of the law should be supported, and that faith should be kept in every promise, whether that promise be a promise of remission or a promise of punishment. When a man is told that he need not mind what the judge says, that his actual sentence will be nothing like so long as what his Lordship has just told him, his respect for the administration of the law is not likely to be increased. To my mind it is most important, that in dealing with a class who are generally uneducated, the strictest truth should be maintained, and that no sentence should be passed which is not intended literally to be carried out.

The deduction usually made from this great principle is simply this—that if a man be sentenced to seven years' penal servitude, for seven years he should stay; and granting the "if," I assent to the conclusion. But is it impossible to alter the sentence? Those who are experienced in the management of criminals are unanimous in affirming, that it is simply impossible to continue large masses of persons in confinement for the mere purpose of punishment, and without any sort of hope or encouragement being held out to them. To treat a man as a beast is a sure way to make him one. Wild beasts are dangerous, but wild beasts with the brains of men are too dangerous for a community which respects its own safety to care to manufacture. No decent respectable person could be got to superintend for years together the mere punishment and inevitable deterioration of any persons, however bad. Some hope must be admitted in any place that is not to be a hell. The consequence has been, that under the present system of time sentences, some such device as that of tickets-of-leave has become inevitable; and with a benevolent view to the reformation of the convict, indulgencies have been allowed, the effect of which is decidedly injurious; but the existence of which in some shape, so long as time sentences are allowed, appears to me to be practically a necessity of administration.

But so injurious a conclusion is not inevitable. It is quite possible to alter the sentence. Give the criminal such a sentence as, while it inflicts an inevitable punishment, at the same time contains in it the element of hope. This may be done by sentencing the prisoner to do so much labour, or, in other words, to earn so many marks. And this is the main feature of the "mark system," for the establishment of which the late Captain Maconochie long laboured in vain. It has been asserted, and that recently, by some who ought to be better informed, that Captain Maconochie's system has been tried and has failed. The system has never been tried in its integrity. The essence of the system is the man's indefeasible right to his liberty, as soon as but no sooner than he has completed his task. To give remission on mere recommendation is to give a bonus to hypocrisy; whereas a right to go out when the work is over stimulates to that working with a will which makes labour both reformatory and productive. I wish I could persuade your readers to recur to a review of one of Captain Maconochie's pamphlets, contained in THE JURIST of the 7th December, 1844 (8 Jur., part 2, p. 466). They will there find a more complete exposition of his principles, and of the means by which he aims, in his own words—"first, to make circumstances in prisons favourable to virtue, not to vice, and to ingenuity and exertion, not to idleness and sloth; and, secondly, to reinforce these circumstances by substituting the arts of moral, religious, and other rational persuasion and exhortation, for direct physical enforcement, in maintaining discipline, in all cases in which they can possibly be made to apply, or be adequately felt." I believe that if this system were fully enforced, prisons might be made nearly or quite self-supporting; for skilled labour might then be employed, which, under the present system, can be turned to no account.

The nearest approach that has lately been made to the system of convict management, recommended by Captain Maconochie, is that which has been pursued with such great success by Sir Walter Crofton in Ireland; and I venture to think that the success which has attended that system is a proof of the soundness of the principles on which it is based, and an earnest of the still greater success which would ensue if those principles were fully carried out. This, however, can only be done by first altering the usual sentence of penal servitude.

I am quite aware that this is only a small part of a great subject. The inadequate punishment inflicted on crimes of violence, as compared with crimes against property, appears to me to require grave consideration. And in small matters many judicious changes might be made, especially in discriminating between the punishment of the first offence and that for a reiterated breach of the law, which should, in my opinion, be a much more serious matter than it is at present. But I have already trespassed too long upon your columns.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
JOSHUA WILLIAMS.

POSTSCRIPT.

I have just read, in an article on convict management in the last number of the Edinburgh Review, p. 248, a short notice of Captain Maconochie, which contains, no doubt inadvertently, as much misrepresentation as it is possible to put in so few lines. "Meantime," says the writer, "the mark system was the experiment of the day." Captain Maconochie had tried it in Norfolk Island, and, when recalled from thence, obtained permission to make the experiment at home. A man of benevolent heart, but of weak judgment and imperfect temper, he had not succeeded in former objects, and was not likely to succeed in this. He failed; but when we witness the actual success of the method, so far as it admits of success, we must remember to whom we owe it. He expected moral reformation from a mechanical appeal to selfishness: he did not get this; but he furnished us with an effectual aid to the inducement of good habits and harmless manners." Captain Maconochie, it is true, was sent to Norfolk Island; but the Government refused to make his marks those certain steps towards freedom, which constituted the very essence of his system. Still less did he ever obtain permission to make the experiment at home. The experiment has not yet been made, and consequently has not failed. I knew him well. He was a man in advance of the times in which he lived, and neither expected nor received the applause of the crowd. Of sound judgment and perfect temper, he gained the respect and esteem of those who had the honour of his friendship. Before he went out to the colonies, his life had been spent, from the age of fifteen, in the active service of his country as an officer in the navy. His misfortune to have been taken prisoner by the French can scarcely be called a want of success in former objects. But as to expecting moral reformation from mechanical means, his life was spent in earnest endeavours to shew the absurdity of any such expectations. If there was ever any person who insisted on the use of moral means in the management of men, that person was Captain Maconochie. He advocated, it is true, the coarsest diet and the hardest fare for all those who refused to labour. He advocated labour for food, and labour for liberty, as a means of reformation. He furnished us, as the writer says, with an effectual aid to the inducement of good habits and harmless manners; and if all burglars and garrotters could be made persons of such habits and manners, I do not know that there would be much else to desire.

JURIDICAL SOCIETY.—A meeting of this society was held at its rooms, 4, St. Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square, on Monday evening, the 9th February; the Right Hon. Lord Stanley, M. P., in the chair. The secretary having read to the society a circular relative to the proposed foundation in honour of Savigny, Mr. W. W. Kerr read a paper on "The Foreign Enlistment Act and The Alabama." A discussion ensued, in which Mr. Whately, Mr. C. Clark, Mr. F. S. Reilly, Mr. Westlake, Mr. Neate, Mr. W. M. Best, and the Chairman took part, and Mr. Kerr replied.

The Queen has been pleased, by letters-patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, to constitute and appoint George Stovin Venables, Esq., of the Inner Temple, London, one of her counsel learned in the law.

No. 424, VOL. IX., NEW SERIES.

In 1 vol. large 8vo., price 35s., the Fifth Edition of THE LAW OF CONTRACTS. By C. G. ADDISON, Esq., Barrister at Law: treating of Sales, Warranties, Mortgages, Landlord and Tenant, Works and Services, Building Contracts, Bailments, Charterparties, Carriers, Insurance, Suretyship, Agency, Partnership, Public Companies, Bills, Notes, &c.
V. & R. Stevens, Sons, & Haynes, 26, Bell-yard, Lincoln's-inn.

JEREMY BENTHAM'S WHOLE WORKS, CHEAP.—A FEW COPIES of these valuable WORKS, Ed. by Sir J. BOWRING, 11 large vols. royal 8vo., are offered at only 5l. 5s. cloth (pub. 9l. 18s.) Early application is desirable, the Work having been long scarce, and the number for sale very small. "In Jeremy Bentham," says a great critic, "the world has lost the great teacher and patriot of his time; the man who has exercised, and is exercising, over the fortunes of mankind the widest and most durable influence." "A knowledge of Bentham's works," says another, "is a key which unlocks all the mysteries of social as well as political government."
Willis & Sotherton, 136, Strand.

Now ready, the Fifteenth Edition, by W. N. WELSBY, Esq., adapted to the New Criminal Statutes of 1861, in 1 vol. royal 12mo., price 1l. 6s. cloth boards.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 21, 1863.

CORPORATIONS and public bodies are too often guilty of acts which the individual members, either from good or bad motives, would shrink from committing. As members of corporations or public bodies, men seem to think that the responsibility for wickedness or fraud is spread over so great a number, that each may easily bear the small share of disgrace or shame which, by an equitable apportionment, falls to his own lot.

Some excuse themselves altogether under the plea, that they have merely acted by the advice of others; some, that they have merely lent their names to give an appearance of respectability or solidity to the undertaking; and others, occupying the position of paid officers, may satisfy their conscience, that by assisting in any attempt to delude or defraud the public, they are merely carrying out the directions of their employers, and that they alone ought to be solely responsible for those acts, the performance of which they have directed. Many wholesome decisions of our courts of law and equity have of late years done much to dispel the delusions of those persons who have allowed their names to be put forward amongst the directors of public companies merely as decoy ducks, by rendering them liable for the deeds of their more active associates; and a recent decision of the House of Lords shews that servants of a company, combining with the directors in the commission of a fraud, are liable to third parties for the injury done to them thereby. The very important case to which we allude is that of Cullen v. Thomson (9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 85). There it appears, that the appellant Cullen, who was a shareholder of the Edinburgh and Glasgow Bank, brought an action to recover damages from the directors, and the manager and assistant manager, on the ground that he had been induced, by their fraudulent report, to purchase shares of the bank, whereby he had suffered loss and damage. The manager and the assistant manager, it appears from the pleadings, had furnished the detailed statements, and were cognisant of the fraudulent report, which was issued and signed by the directors only. The Inner Court of Session in Scotland (dissentiente Lord Ivory), affirming the decision of the Lord Ordinary, thought that the allegations (the effect of which only has been briefly stated) were not sufficient to furnish issues for a jury against the manager and assistant manager.

It was said by Lord Curriehill, that "it was a very important matter indeed to extend the liabilities, which are quite well established in certain circumstances against directors, against those who are only servants of those directors, and who must obey instructions, and who may be dismissed by them at any time." It was, moreover, considered by their Lordships, that there was not a proper connexion between the manager and assistant manager, and the written statements said to have contained the misrepresentations which rendered them responsible to persons who became purchasers of the shares. Upon appeal to the House of Lords, the judgment of the Court of Sessions was reversed, and a declaration made, that there was issuable matter in the record as against the respondents, the manager and assistant manager. The pleadings, however, from which the issuable matter was with some doubt and difficulty eliminated, is described by the Lord Chancellor, with a graphic severity by no means inapplicable to Scotch pleadings in general, as containing "loose, rambling, and irrelevant statements, by which the relevant matter is overlaid, and almost hidden."

With regard to the law upon the subject, the judgment of the Lord Chancellor is deserving of a most attentive perusal, not only as containing sound law, and sound common sense, but for the high tone of morality which it enforces, and on account of which it may be very favourably contrasted with lower views of commercial morality entertained by the majority of the Scotch Bench.

The Lord Chancellor considered that, whether viewing the manager and assistant manager, as officers or servants of the directors, they were liable for assisting in their frauds.

"The managers of a joint-stock bank," said his Lordship, "are well-known public officers, whose due selection is more important than that of the directors themselves; for it may be taken as a fact, of which we cannot be judicially ignorant, that the credit of a banking establishment depends in no inconsiderable degree on the opinion entertained of the knowledge, ability, and character of the managers. I cannot, therefore, agree with the conclusion, either that on the contract or deed of settlement the managers are the mere servants of the directors, or that the reports must be taken to have been accepted by the shareholders and the public, without any reference to the managers, and solely on the faith and credit given to the directors alone. On the contrary, I think it is clear, from the constitution, and the prescribed mode of transacting its business, that the shareholders would have a right to regard the general reports as founded on the statements and accounts of the managers, and that the public would look on them in the same light."

But even assuming the managers to be mere servants of the directors, his Lordship was clearly of opinion that their position did not excuse complicity in fraud. "Can it," he says, "be maintained as a proposition of law, that a servant who knowingly joins with and assists his master in the commission of a fraud is not civilly responsible for the consequences? All persons directly concerned in the commission of a fraud are to be treated as principals. No party can be permitted to excuse himself on the ground that he acted as the agent or the servant of another; and the reason is plain, for the contract of agency or of service cannot impose any obligation on the agent or servant to commit or assist in the committing of a fraud."

The broad principles laid down by the Lord Chancellor will, it is to be hoped, be followed out in similar cases, and the result will inevitably be, that even if a higher tone of morality cannot be introduced amongst those individuals who either compose, or manage, or act for, public companies, it will, at any rate, infuse amongst their officers and servants a wholesome dread of the punishment for participating in fraud, and will make them understand that they cannot shelter themselves from the consequences, by the allegation that they were bound to commit fraud at the bidding of their employers. The law recognises no such obligation as springing from express contract; and it would be contrary to every legal principle that any such obligation should be raised by law from any implied contract between master and servant.

SHALL WE REGISTER TITLE?

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—When a writer professes to criticise motives, he undertakes a somewhat perilous task, and, moreover, lays himself open to imputations by way of retort; it is, I think, much to be regretted that Mr. Tenison Edwards should have adopted this course in the book, intitled as above, which he has just published in defence of the Transfer of Land Act. I may, therefore, at the outset, be permitted to say, that, with respect to Mr. Edwards's preliminary remarks, in which he attacks solicitors generally, or provincial solicitors, or a section of solicitors (for the expressions used are so irreconcilable that it is impossible to say how far his strictures extend), in consequence of their non-appreciation of the benefits of the said act, and imputes to them personal motives as the ground of their opposition, that I no more believe the truth of what is imputed, however extended or however limited the imputations may be, than I believe that Mr. Edwards himself had any personal motive for writing in defence of the act. He certainly fell, in this instance, into a greater error than the editor of The Law Times, of whom Mr. Edwards complains, for omitting to insert an allusion, contained in a letter from Mr. Edwards, to the new act as an "infant," and to solicitors as "infanticides."

The act, however, is evidently Mr. Edwards's "first love," and he argues accordingly on its behalf with considerable warmth; for instance, even the portability of the new assurance is not forgotten (p. 8):—"What more can a purchaser require? Could he feel more content by having a deed covering four or five skins of parchment? I trow not; for he has a certificate of a few lines, which he can understand as well as any lawyer, and he has the conviction that nothing can disturb his title, which no mere deed could ever have given him." The concluding part of the above extract describes the boon which the act is said to offer to the bona fide purchaser; and Mr. Edwards has written, with considerable ingenuity, for the purpose of convincing the public generally, or their solicitors (I fear he rather despairs of convincing the latter, or he would treat them more civilly), of the reality of the boon which, as Mr. Edwards admits, has not yet been appreciated. Now, after an attentive perusal of this smartly-written little work, for which, apart from the imputations of personal motives to class interests, the thanks of the public and the profession are justly due to Mr. Edwards, my difficulty, I regret to say, still remains. What is the grand principle of this act? Is it not the substitution of abstracts of the effect of documents for the documents themselves? Immediately upon the death of anybody, his or her affairs must, on the principle of this act, become a subject for litigation; and whereas the event might never happen in which a point of construction would arise, yet, unless I mistake the effect of the act, or unless the registrar takes refuge in a verbatim copy of doubtful limitations, he must give and record his opinion thereon; but if, as would be most likely to happen, he should take refuge in such verbatim copy as I have referred to, what does this boasted act afford beyond expensive amusement? It never was intended, and is not the effect of the act, in any view of it, that devisees, or heirs, or volunteers should have an indefeasible title, so that they may settle their differences amongst themselves or with the registrar, by reference to the words of the will on proceedings in ejectment at common law, but only so long as a purchaser for valuable consideration is not introduced; for, as I read, charitably, the 20th section of the act, or rather conjecture what was intended to be thereby expressed, I should not be able to disturb a bonâ fide purchaser for valuable consideration registered, from a vendor registered, unless I could do so by reference to the terms of the registration, out of which I should not be allowed to travel. Now, what reason for this difference can be alleged? Why am I not entitled to the benefit of the very words of the will after, as well as before, the sale by my registered rival? Why am I bound to fight out the matter before the registrar, and convince him, or for ever after the said sale hold my peace? It is nothing less than a system of crude and hasty litigation which the public are asked to impose on themselves as final, even if it proved so; for, as to the finality of it, the registrar would be more highly gifted than ordinary mortals if he avoided falling into ambiguous expressions; and I confess I am prejudiced enough to prefer endeavouring to find out the intention of a testator or settlor from his or her own words, than from those of any registrar. Have we not already acts of Parliament that enable us to lease and convey in a very brief form? Who ever makes use of these statutes? I fear the Transfer of Land Act is similarly ill-adapted to the working of wills and settlements; it is not, indeed, by its supporters, including Mr. Edwards himself, represented as a boon to those who do not sell, but keep, their real property. Marriage settlements, which sometimes are of slow growth in the chambers of conveyancers would be still more delayed if in every case the registrar had to determine the title of what was intended to be settled; and it would seem rather absurd for the parties to pay the expense of a settlement in the ordinary form, in order that the registrar might abstract the effect thereof in a few lines, the correctness of which abstract, I admit, would be capable of being questioned until the great terminator of all disputes, the purchaser for valuable consideration, enters upon the stage, like the hero, albeit somewhat tinselled, of a melodrama. That nothing should be had without litigation appears to be the ruling spirit of the act; I cannot, therefore, understand how Mr. Edwards was led to attribute any personal motives to the solicitors in their opposition to it. But, as I have before observed, by your kind permission (8 Jur., N. S., part 2, p. 165), the main section of the act, at least, ought to be free from doubt as to its interpretation; and I think I may state, without fear of contradiction, that sect. 20 is not so. I perused Mr. Edwards's book in order that my doubts on this head might be, if possible, removed; but, far from removing them, Mr. Edwards has only confirmed them. At pp. 72 and 73 he writes as follows:—"The act only declares, 'that, subject &c., the persons originally, and from time to time named and described in such record of title'" (now follows Mr. Edwards's explanation); "that is, the applicant or applicants, and subsequently owners, other than purchasers, mortgagees, &c., 'shall, for the purposes of any sale, mortgage, or contract for valuable consideration, by such persons respectively, be and be deemed to be &c.'," that is, according to Mr. Edwards's exposition, purchasers, mortgagees, &c., have no title whatever under the act, for any purpose whatever. Why did Mr. Edwards fall into this error? Because he felt the passage was obscure; that even the "unlearned" mind, for which he professes to write, might, though not of a legal turn, require something more than a title expressed to be good "for the purposes of" &c. I may, however, err in attributing this as a slip of the pen to Mr. Edwards; for by reference to p. 25, in treating of the case of Mr. Roupell, and in pointing out an error into which a correspondent of the Solicitors' Journal appears to have fallen, we find the author stating, that "the applicant can never obtain an indefeasible title. He (the purchaser from Roupell) would have been placed on the register, probably, but the title would not become indefeasible until the property came into the hands of a purchaser subsequently for valuable consideration, without notice of the fraud." May I ask Mr. Edwards whether such last-mentioned purchaser would have appeared in the record of title? and, if so, what is meant by the exception in his commentary on sect. 20? Perhaps it is a just conclusion, from the whole of the book, that the author's mind is not yet quite clear upon the effect of the 20th section; for he congratulates himself on having the authority of Lord St. Leonards in favour of the proposition, that it is unnecessary for a purchaser of a registered title to go back beyond the register. His Lordship's sentence, however, commences with "But it is said, when on the registry, &c.," and he must be a sanguine man that deduces from the whole sentence anything beyond a statement by his Lordship of what would follow on a certain assumption. Nor is this the only blot on the act. In the 105th section (p. 105 of Mr. Edwards's book) it is declared, that "the act or thing done or obtained by means of such fraud or falsehood shall be null and void to all intents and purposes, except as against a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice." Does not this mean, according to grammatical construction, that such act or thing should be good as against such purchaser? Was not the very opposite of this idea intended to be expressed? Who can doubt that the words "as against" ought to have been "on behalf of"?

I confess I am not at all surprised that the act is a dead letter, and I fear it will continue so, notwithstanding Mr. Edwards's ingenuity, until, at all events, the intention of the Legislature be better expressed, apart from any question as to the advisability or non-advisability of the scheme. I am not clear as to the proposition which Mr. Edwards lays down, that a system which works well in a young colony would necessarily suit the old country, nor do I think boundaries the only difficulty. On the whole, the "unlearned man" (p. 32) will probably do well to pause before taking the advice of Mr. Edwards, contrary, as it is, to that of Lord St. Leonards, to whose "crushing irony" the author alludes (p. 138). Mr. Edwards finally remarks—"Every one must admit that certainty of title to land, facility of dealing with it, and economy in dealing with it, are three objects most desirable" (p. 163). Alas! that "blind prejudice and shortsighted self-interest," to which Mr. Edwards next refers, should have failed to see the reality of the possibility of these acquisitions under or by virtue of the Transfer of Land Act!

Your obedient servant,

Rolls Chambers, Chancery-lane.

LAW STUDIES AT OXFORD.

THE following is the form of the new statute of the University of Oxford, which was submitted to CONGREGATION on Thursday, the 12th instant:—

"Stat. Tit. VI. (IX.) ii. § 8, 26, 27 (p. 105, ed. 1861) abrogare, et hæc quæ sequuntur subrogare.

"26. Nemini in hac schola concedatur testimonium, nisi qui rerum in Anglia ab anno salutis millesimo sexagesimo sexto usque ad annum millesimum quingentesimum nonum gestarum, et portionis illius Legum Anglia, quæ res immobiles spectat; vel rerum in Anglia ab anno salutis millesimo quingentesimo nono usque ad annum millesimum septingentesimum secundum, et portionis illius Legum Anglia quæ res mobiles spectat et personas, se peritum præbuerit. Candidatis tamen liceat in locum hujus vel illius Juris Anglici partis Jus Romanum substituere. Porro concedatur ut quisvis examinandus in locum hujus vel illius partis Historiæ Anglicæ celeberrimum opus Adami Smith 'De Gentium Opibus,' vel alium quendam probatum librum in eadem materie, una cum Historia Indiæ Britannicæ, substituat.

"27. Quod ad illos attinet qui honorem aliquem in hac schola petunt, materies examinationis esto Historia recentiorum temporum usque ad annum a Christo nato millesimum septingentesimum octogesimum nonum, et Jurisprudentia. Juris Anglici hanc saltem vel illam partem adhibeat quisque, vel Jus Romanum, aut, si malit, utrumque. Ceterum nisi jus et Anglicum adhibeatur et Romanum, adjungatur semper vel Jus (quod vocant) Belli et Pacis, vel liber aliquis probatus de Gentium Opibus.

"The amended portions are printed in italics; and clauses 26 and 27 are transposed from the original."

The text of the old statute is subjoined:—

"26. In schola autem jurisprudentiæ et historiæ modernæ hæc esto materies examinationis; historia recentiorum temporum usque ad annum a Christo nato millesimum septingentesimum octogesimum nonum, jurisprudentia, et specialiter leges Angliæ, Jus civile, aut jus quod vocant belli et pacis, ab omnibus primam, secundam aut tertiam classem ambientibus, semper requiri volumus. Celeberrimum etiam illud opus philosophi nostratis Adami Smith 'De Gentium Opibus,' candidatis adhibere liceat.

"27. Nemini autem in hac schola concedatur testimonium, nisi qui rerum in Anglia ab anno salutis millesimo sexagesimo sexto usque ad annum millesimum quingentesimum nonum gestarum, et portionis illius commentarium Gulielmi Blackstone, editione probatissima semper adhibita, in qua de rebus immobilibus disseruit vir doctissimus—vel rerum in Anglia ab anno salutis millesimo quingentesimo nono usque ad annum millesimum septingentesimum secundum, et legum quæ apud nos res mobiles spectant et personas, eodem jurisconsulto auctore, se peritum præbuerit. Candidatis tamen liceat in locum hujus vel illius juris Anglici partis Institutiones imperiales substituere."

It will be seen, that the object of the new statute is to enable candidates to substitute any other approved works for those of Blackstone and Adam Smith; and we are informed, that the suggestors of the alteration contemplate the occasional or frequent substitution of "Williams on Real Property," for "Blackstone's Commentaries."

THE INNS OF COURT AND THE BAR IN EARLY TIMES.

WITHOUT entering upon any considerations of the particular alterations proposed by Sir George Bowyer, or anticipating the result of the deliberations of the Benchers, it may not be without its use to refer to some of the characteristics which, from the earliest days, have distinguished the societies which are known as the "Inns of Court." Not long since, in referring to their constitution and their history, we had occasion to advert to the remarkable fact that, from their origin to the present day, they have maintained the character of voluntary societies, with no legal incorporation, and regulated entirely by the rules which the members themselves have thought proper to frame. The subject is a curious one, and possesses much more historic and constitutional interest than might at first appear. It is one upon which we have but little information; but the few facts which we do know all lead to the conclusion that, for the freedom of our laws and for the existence in England of an independent Bar of advocates, we are in some degree indebted to this very voluntary character of the societies which now occupy the Inns of Court.

Of the precise period of their origin we have no accurate information. Sir William Blackstone follows the tradition recorded by several older writers, and fixes it about the period of the Great Charter, when the Court of Common Pleas became stationary at Westminster. Dugdale thinks that before the days of Edward II we have no certain memorials on their history—nothing but vague traditions. But it seems certain that some of them existed in the early years of Henry III. We must remember that just about that period a great, although silent, revolution in the administration of the law had been almost completed by the gradual transfer of the judicial business of the country from the old Saxon Shire-motes or County Courts to the King's Court. This was accomplished by the free exercise of a prerogative always claimed by the Sovereign, of directing any particular cause to be disposed of in the tribunal in which he himself presided. Under the Saxon monarchs the power was rarely used. Under the Norman Sovereigns, it was so generally resorted to, that at last the King's "original writ" was issued to any plaintiff who chose to pay for it. The result was, that the old tribunals fell into comparative disuse, and when Magna Charta fixed at Westminster that department of the Curia Regis which attended to the Communia Placita, or Common Pleas, that Court was the great tribunal of civil justice for the realm. The change was much more than the substitution of one central tribunal for a number of local courts. In the Shire-motes the freeholders of the county were the judges, the pleadings were simple and informal, and everything was conducted in the Saxon tongue. The King's Court was the personal tribunal of the Sovereign, and under the Norman princes it was modelled after feudal forms. The justices were appointed by the King. They prescribed a technical and highly artificial system of pleading, and the proceedings were conducted in Norman French, because that was the language spoken by the King. The old tribunals had been attended by men who professed to devote themselves to the study of the law, but no special order of advocates existed. Advocacy was free. In the royal tribunal it was an essential principle that the conduct of all causes should be intrusted to officers of the King, attending on him in his court of justice, and thence called servientes ad legem, or serjeants-at-law. These officers were appointed by the King's writ, and were removable only by the same. They assumed their dignity with a costly and showy ceremonial, and were, in fact, legal officers of State. That, by the very constitution of the Court they were exclusively the practitioners, was clearly established in the argument before the Privy Council on the legality of the warrant by which William IV attempted to admit the general Bar to practise in the Common Pleas. Those who wish for full information on this curious subject will find it in Serjeant Manning's Report of that argument, with the documents he has annexed. It is enough for our present purpose to say, that it was then clearly proved that, so far as the King's Court was concerned, these officials of the Crown were the only English Bar. The influence of the change extended far beyond its effect upon the conduct of suits. Under the new system, law became a science known only to a few. The rules of special pleading, and the complex system of real property introduced by the feudal tenures, occupied a larger portion of that science than the maxims of the old English common law. With the gradual disuse of the tribunals in which the people themselves administered that law, the knowledge of it declined. There was no school of legal education in which the gentry might still acquire the knowledge which these courts had taught. The Universities taught only the civil and the canon laws. The laws of Edward the Confessor were still the laws of England; but with the administration of justice in the hands of the feudal lawyers of the King's Court, it seemed probable that they might gradually be displaced by feudal principles, and that, in the conflict between the Norman and the English elements of the law, the old Saxon common law, like the old Saxon tribunals, might be insensibly superseded and set aside.

Such was the state of things at the period when we first find a trace of the voluntary societies of lawyers. We have no record of the class of persons who were their original members. We only know that they were not the serjeants-at-law. No serjeant was ever a member of an Inn of Court. There is, no doubt, truth in the tradition which tells us that they were the men of the law collected from all parts of the kingdom. They were, probably, the practitioners of the Shire Courts, driven from them by the decline of business in those tribunals. Although incapable of pleading in the King's Court, they were at liberty to act as the counsel, or advisers, of those who had suits, and in this capacity it seems probable that they attended the Common Pleas. They purchased houses which were designated Inns of Court, in which they established themselves under the modest pretext of providing a residence for persons engaged in attendance on the Court. There cannot be the slightest doubt that this was the ostensible object, and it is equally certain that with this ostensible object they combined another and a very different one—that of seminaries of instruction in the law. Lord Campbell describes them as "originally mere dining clubs, like the clubs at the West End." But they were clubs which admitted as their members persons wishing to study the law. We cannot help thinking that much of the obscurity which rests over their early history arises from the fact that they were schools of law, disguised under the semblance of mere

"hostels" or clubs. Henry III was not particularly anxious that his subjects should be well versed in the institutions of Alfred or the laws of Edward the Confessor. Some attempts to teach the law had been suppressed with a high hand. A writ is extant in which Henry III commands the mayor and sheriffs of London to proclaim—literally, to shout out through the city, clamari facient per totam civitatem—that no one should presume to teach the law within its walls. Blackstone supposes that this was intended as an act of favour to the new schools. There is not a trace of such a motive in the ordinance itself. Nothing would have been easier than for his Majesty to command the mayor and sheriffs to "shout out" to the citizens, that the King prohibited schools of law in the city, because he wished them to learn it much better elsewhere. But it is impossible to believe that if the King really patronised the legal seminaries, it would not have been manifested by a charter or at least a license, and that their character as schools of law would not have been distinctly recognised. The facts are, that very soon after the date of that writ, we find men teaching the law in houses which they purchased at the village of the "Old Bourn," on the slope that is now Holborn Hill, just outside the boundaries of the city, as if the locality were selected to escape the King's prohibition and the authority of the mayor. Four principal societies were in time established; and to each of these were attached some subordinate ones, which were constituted to the number of ten more. It is a remarkable fact that not one of them ever assumed any collegiate title, but they were known only by the name of the mansion which they occupied for the time. Gray's and Lincoln's Inns derived their names, the one from a house which had been the residence of Baron Gray, the other from the mansion of Lacy, Earl of Lincoln. The ten subordinate houses were beyond all question mere halls for the reception of pupils preparatory to their entrance into the others, yet these professed to be nothing more than "clubs" for the convenience of the clerks in the offices of the courts. They were, therefore, called Inns of Chancery, as the others were Inns of Court. How or when they first submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the judges does not appear, but they received, no doubt, protection in return. They are described by Stowe as societies which "are not corporations, nor have any judicial power over the members, but have certain orders among themselves which, by consent, have the force of law." They acquired such reputation as schools of law, that when Sir John Fortescue wrote in the days of Henry VI, they had nearly 2000 students, "all gentlemen born," sent by their parents to learn the law, not for the purpose of making a living by its practice, but to complete their education by its study. Twenty marks at least was each student's annual expense, but "if he had a servant with him, as many of them had, the expense was much greater." The sons of the first nobility became pupils in these schools. Their education was not confined to the law. They were taught all the polite accomplishments necessary for a gentleman—to dance, to sing, to play upon instruments, and fence. Divinity even was not forgotten "on festival days," and masques, plays, and revels were provided for them, so that they might "in no exercise be behind those who were brought up in the King's house."

After some time, we find the members of these voluntary associations admitted to practise as advocates in two of the King's Courts. They never succeeded in interfering with the exclusive privileges of the serjeants in the Court of Common Pleas, but when the Courts of Queen's Bench and Exchequer assumed jurisdiction over the ordinary class of actions, the "apprentices" became advocates in these courts. Every student of legal history is acquainted with the strange fictions by which these two latter courts assumed the right of entertaining such suits. In the exercise of this irregular jurisdiction they were not bound by the formalities which regulated the more legitimate proceedings of the Court of Common Pleas. They felt themselves at liberty to dispense with the feudal principle of the necessity of a serjeant in a proceeding which was in its very nature a departure from all ancient rule. The probability is, that at first these courts adopted the old Saxon principle of admitting any person to plead before them, and that, when a rule was established restricting advocacy to those who followed it as a profession, the judges received only those who were "apprentices" of the Inns of Court. The position of these apprentices became in time firmly established, until at last it became a custom to issue the King's writ, constituting as serjeant only to those who had previously been apprentices of one of the Inns; but, as Lord Brougham observes, this is merely matter of usage, not of law. There is no law that prohibits the Queen from making any man she pleases a serjeant-at-law. Buller was made a judge and a serjeant long before he had gone through the sixteen years' apprenticeship, which is said to be a qualification for the coif. But no consideration shewn to them ever induced these societies to part with their character of independence. In the high prerogative days of the Tudors and the Stuarts attempts were occasionally made to use the Privy Council, and the judges, and even the Star Chamber, as the means of issuing orders as to their discipline. The interference was not greater than would unhesitatingly have been exercised by the same authority in the case of any private society of gentlemen in the realm. A record in Lincoln's Inn shews how, in one instance, the societies evaded a dispute with the Royal authority without admitting its right to interfere. They accepted some regulations sent to them by James I, the Privy Council, and the judges, but they took care to enter that they were "orders agreed upon by the common and uniform consent of the Masters and Benchers, which orders proceeded first from his Majesty's special care and commandment, and were recommended to the Masters and Benchers by the grave advice and direction of all the judges."

These few hints upon a subject which will well repay a much more extended inquiry, may be sufficient to shew that the cause of English freedom owes something to these voluntary societies of men practising and studying the law. They taught the knowledge of the free principles of the common law to a large number of the nobility and gentry of England. They supplied to the courts an independent Bar, and asserted the liberty of advocacy against the feudal principles which restricted it in the King's Courts to officers appointed by the King. Had they not done so, it is impossible to say what use, in some period of English history, might have been made of the power of the Crown over a Bar exclusively constituted by the King's writ. We are not sure that they could have done all this had they derived their existence from any charter of a King. Under existing circumstances, it may be well that the memory of these things should be recalled. The time, perhaps, may be past when the acceptance of privileges conferred by charter or act of Parliament involves a surrender of independence. Yet those who know the value of old associations may think that any apparent advantage might be dearly purchased by the slightest infringement of the absolute independence and self-government which for nearly seven centuries these societies have preserved. They may well feel a pride, after the passing of those centuries, in being still what they were at the commencement—"mere voluntary associations of men practising and studying the law." Would it be well, either for the law or these societies, that they should lightly part with traditions which, once broken up, can never be recalled?—Saturday Review.

THE PRESENT TREATMENT OF CRIMINALS.

THE following is an extract from an excellent article in The Times of Friday, February 13:—

We have before us a record of the cases tried at the Central Criminal Court, the Middlesex Sessions, and the police courts, during the last few days. From these we propose to select a sufficient number of examples to prove that the belief in the frequency of outrages by old offenders is no mere fancy, though they may often be committed after the ticket-of-leave has expired. To begin, then, with the 30th January: a chemist, named Worthy, was committed for trial by the Lord Mayor on a charge of forgery, after two former convictions, one for a similar offence, another for larceny. On the same day, a hunchback, named Vimpiny, was committed for coining, after a previous sentence of ten years' penal servitude, five of which had been remitted. Upon his trial it appeared that he was connected with Cummings, recently indicted for participation in the Bank forgeries; that he had "a collection of the most expensive instruments," and carried on his operations on a first-rate scale. On the following day, a man who was committed for a daring highway robbery at Camden-town, was proved to have been "a thief from a child, several times convicted of felony, and the companion of notorious thieves," and to be cohabiting with a well-known female thief. On the 2nd February, a woman was convicted before the Common-Serjeant for a second larceny from her master, into whose service she seems to have entered "for the primary object of robbery;" and a general dealer was committed for trial by Mr. Barker for larceny from the person after, at least, two previous convictions. On the 3rd February, four burglars were tried, and sentenced by the Recorder of London and the Common-Serjeant. One had "again and again been summarily convicted;" another had "a numerous list of convictions" against him; a third "had been convicted only once before." Three boys were found guilty, the same day, on various charges of stealing, all of whom had been imprisoned before, and one had been sent to a reformatory for three years. On the 4th February, a female pickpocket, who was convicted before Mr. Baron Channell, was described as "one of the oldest and most expert omnibus thieves in the metropolis," and had been imprisoned many times for this practice during the last seven years. On the same day, a costermonger was committed for trial by Mr. Barker, who "had been a thief from his childhood." Nine months' imprisonment in 1837, six months' in 1858, nine months' in 1859, three months' in 1860, three months' again in 1861, three months' more in 1862, besides narrow escapes, were among the antecedents of this veteran pilferer. A ferocious negro sailor pleaded "guilty," the next day, to a charge of burglary after a former conviction; and one of the most desperate members of the "Field-lane gang" was brought to justice after a long series of robberies. The present week has been scarcely less fruitful in cases of equal aggravation. At the Middlesex Sessions, on Tuesday, two servants, who had robbed master after master, but had managed to elude the police by constant change of names, at last met with their deserts. Another prisoner, who was found guilty of stealing fowls, was proved to have suffered imprisonment for burglary, and many other offences; and another prisoner, George Jones, had the following list of sentences put in against him:—"Three months in 1844; three months, 1847; two months, 1848; nine months, 1850; two months, 1854; three months, 1855; twenty-one days in 1860; six months, 1861; and six months in 1862"—making nine convictions in all. As a pendant to this biography, we may give that of George Seymour, contained in our impression of yesterday:—"March, 1850, twelve months' hard labour; June, 1852, six months'; April, 1855, eighteen months', for burglary; July, 1858, five years, for burglary; but before this sentence was expired, the prisoner was liberated on a ticket-of-leave. He was again convicted in September, 1862, at Bow-street, as a rogue and a vagabond, and sentenced to be imprisoned for three months." Four other cases of reconversion are recorded on the same page as this, and in three the prisoners had undergone penal servitude.

These facts and figures tell their own story. All of them came to light within less than a fortnight in London alone. Doubtless, there were other prisoners whose identity as returned convicts could not be proved, or who had come into the hands of magistrates in distant parts of the country. It is well known, that the police often fail to obtain evidence of previous convictions, and that many acts which pass as first offences are really the last fruits of a long training in crime. There can be no "exaggeration" about such a list as this; on the contrary, it represents but a trifling per-centage of the results which flow, directly or indirectly, from the system of punishment as it has too long been administered.

It is to be hoped, that the hint thus given will not be lost sight of by the Royal Commission sitting on the present treatment of criminals. If, in order to ascertain the working of the system, they rely on reports and statistics presented to them by officials, everything will appear coulour de rose, and their proceedings prove a solemn farce. We trust, however, that, following the example here set, they will inquire for themselves; and thus make their proceedings not only a reality, but a terrible one, to the dangerous classes of the community, as well as a warning to all blind theorists and ill-judging philanthropists.

THE LEGAL PROCEDURE SOCIETY.

We take the following from the Law Times:—

A society, calling itself "The Legal Procedure Society," has been formed under the auspices of Mr. J. W. Smith, of the Temple, for the purpose of procuring a reform in procedure, by way both of increasing speed and diminishing costs. Recent changes have not gone far enough to satisfy Mr. Smith, although it would be difficult to devise a further curtailment of process, without abolishing forms altogether, and leaving every case to cadi justice. Nor without this would it be possible to make much reduction of cost, for the expenses now are not for procedure, but for trial, and are inevitable in any manner of administering justice. Besides, recent experience seems to say that cheap law is not the good thing it appears to be; that it may be made as ready an engine of oppression as dear law, with the disadvantage of cultivating a litigious spirit by the facility provided for its exercise. But Mr. Smith shall speak for himself.

"The first principle is, that 'every right and obligation conferred or imposed by the law should be enforceable at all times, and, as far as possible, within reach of all places alike.'

"The second is, that 'the appearance of both parties before the judge should be the first step in every cause.'

"In pursuance of the first of the principles above laid down, the society will point out the folly and injustice of the present antiquated system of terms, vacations, and circuits, which governs the superior courts, under which there are three full courts, sitting simultaneously during only twelve weeks, scattered over the year in bunches of three, under which country causes can only be tried in the country twice a year, and London causes can only be tried in London at certain limited times, and with unseemly haste and ruinous delay, and under which no cause whatever can be tried between the beginning of August and the beginning of November.

"The society will point out that, if we had one superior court with fifteen judges, instead of three courts each consisting of five judges, then one judge sitting every day throughout the year would clear off all the London and Middlesex causes (which number about 1200 per annum); one judge would suffice for the criminal business of the metropolis; one would do all the work at chambers; a full court of four judges could be always sitting and accessible; and seven judges, by going down once a month to one or two towns in each of the circuit districts, would, in ten days, clear off all the civil and criminal business, which averages ten causes and thirty-five prisoners per month to each circuit. Causes would thus be tried as rapidly in the superior as in the inferior or county courts, and one month would be substituted for six months as the maximum of time during which an accused person would lie in goal waiting for his trial."

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.—A meeting of this society took place at its rooms, 3, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, on Monday, the 2nd February; James Vaughan, Esq., in the chair. The following resolution was moved by Mr. Edgar:—"That, considering the valuable and lengthened services of the Right Hon. Lord Brougham, the president of this society, in the cause of law reform, and especially with reference to the treatment and punishment of criminals, the society have learned with regret the omission of his lordship's name from the royal commission recently issued to inquire into the question of convict discipline, and desire to place on the minutes their protest against such omission." The motion was seconded by Mr. Edward Webster. Mr. S. B. Bristowe opposed the motion, and moved to pass to the order of the day. The amendment was seconded by Mr. Montague Bere. After some observations from Mr. R. Stuart and Mr. Hastings, Mr. Edgar consented to modify the original resolution, by omitting all the words after the word "discipline." The amendment was then withdrawn, and the original motion, as altered, unanimously carried. Mr. Shaw Lefevre read a paper on the "Discipline of the Bar." Mr. Wingfield proposed that the paper be printed and circulated. The motion was seconded by Mr. Palmer. Mr. Bere, Mr. E. Webster, Mr. Hastings, Mr. R. Stuart, and Mr. Vaughan spoke on the motion, which was afterwards put to the meeting and unanimously carried. The meeting then adjourned.

The Supreme Court of the colony of Queensland has appointed William Chubb, of No. 14, South-square, Gray's-inn, London, Solicitor, a Commissioner for taking affidavits in causes depending in the said Court in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON THE LAW OF EVIDENCE. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq. Fourth Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions; incorporating the Statutes and reported Cases to the time of publication. By G. M. DOWDESWELL and J. G. MALCOLM, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. In 1 vol. royal 8vo., 1853, price 12. 16s. cloth.
In the parliamentary debate on disqualified witnesses (House of Commons, Feb. 12, 1861), referring to the case of Maden v. Catnach, Sir G. C. Lewis said, "He would read from Starkie on Evidence, which was known to be a standard work upon the subject, a statement of the law as applicable to the case (vide Examination as to Religious Belief, pp. 115, 116). That is a clear statement of the rule of law upon the subject."

THE JURIST.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 28, 1863.

WE are sorry to be compelled to notice further disgraceful proceedings at the Middlesex Sessions. The following is the report as given in the daily papers:—

"On George Gerkin and Charles Curtis being placed at the bar, charged with stealing two bedsteads, the property of Rosa Kemper, the mistress of Gerkin,

"Mr. Metcalfe, who appeared for one of the prisoners, challenged the whole of the jury in the box, and they quitted it, but as one jury was locked up, and another was on duty in the court before Mr. Bodkin, the panel was exhausted, and another jury could not be obtained.

"Mr. Payne said, if the learned counsel persisted in this course, the case could not be tried that day.

"Mr. Metcalfe.—I do not choose to have the case tried before a judge who not only sums up the evidence, but tells the jury what verdict they are to find.

"Mr. Henry Charles Hanson (foreman of the jury).—I can assure your lordship that we were not influenced at all by your summing up, but we acted upon our own conviction.

"Mr. Metcalfe.—I want to have the case tried before a proper judge, and one who understands his business.

"Mr. Payne.—I have tried thousands of cases, and I have endeavoured to do justice.

"Mr. Metcalfe.—I have a right to challenge the jury. I object to this case being tried by the same jury as tried the other cases. Let it be tried in the other court.

"Mr. Payne.—That is not a proper ground for your objection.

"Mr. Metcalfe.—As I cannot object to the judge, I object to the jury. If it is to be tried before you, I shall continue to object.

"Mr. Payne.—This is an attempt at insubordination. I have tried cases for many years, and I am not going to be put down now. My only object is, and ever has been, public justice.

"Mr. Metcalfe.—That is my object, but that is not administered here, and that is the opinion of every member of the bar.

"Mr. Payne.—As you have prevented the case from being heard now, it must stand for Tuesday next.

"Mr. Metcalfe.—I cannot come then, and after what has occurred I shall make a special application to have the case tried in the other court.

"Mr. Payne.—I have no wish to try the case, but I will not allow myself to be treated in such a manner.

"Mr. Metcalfe.—There may yet be time to try the case in the other court.

"Mr. Payne.—I say again I am not anxious to try the case, and if you can induce the assistant judge to try it, of course I can have no objection. I have no feeling whatever in the matter.

"The matter here terminated, and as there were several other cases to be disposed of, the jury re-entered the box, and the business proceeded without further interruption. The two prisoners, who gave rise to this personal altercation, stand for trial on Tuesday next."

On the following day Mr. Payne reverted to the subject thus. Addressing the jury, he said—"Before I discharge you, I think I ought to allude to one case which it was originally intended should have been tried to-day, but it was thought better that it should be postponed until next week, when a fresh session will commence. I refer to the case in which a learned counsel made some extraordinary observations with respect to myself. There are one or two remarks which I think I ought to make. I have been found fault with for not using strong measures with the learned counsel at the time. I will tell you why I did not. Very early in my professional life I remember the eminent and excellent judge, Sir James Allan Parke, was treated by a learned serjeant in a similar manner to that in which I was treated by the learned counsel. He at first was inclined to commit him for contempt of court; but, on reflection, he altered his opinion, and used these remarkable words, which I have never forgotten, and upon which I acted in dealing with the learned counsel:—'I trust that I shall ever be able to display the forbearance of a Christian judge.' But, by the advice of the assistant judge and other magistrates, I have inclosed the extracts from the newspapers to the Treasurer of the Inner Temple, and called his attention and that of the Benchers to the conduct of the learned counsel. I have only further to say, lest the public should suppose me to be the incompetent person which the learned counsel alleges that I am, that during the five years which I have sat on this bench the number of prisoners tried before me amounts within a fraction to 2500; and after a careful reflection, I am satisfied in my own mind, that among that large number not a single innocent person has been convicted, or a single guilty one received too severe a sentence. Points of law which I have decided have been confirmed by the judges in the Court of Criminal Appeal; and I have also the satisfaction of knowing that not one of my sentences has in any way been interfered with by the Secretary of State."

That the conduct of Mr. Metcalfe in this affair was insubordinate, and a contempt of the tribunal before which he was practising, there can be no doubt; and, indeed, there may be a question whether it was not illegal also. It is only as representing the accused that counsel has any right of challenging the jury—a right which is given for his protection of the accused against unfit or prejudiced persons finding their way into the jury box. But when he or his counsel states openly that he challenges the jury, not from lack of confidence in them, but because he intends by that means to do indirectly what the law forbids his doing directly, namely, challenge the judge, it may be that the Court would be justified in disallowing such a challenge. This question has never, so far as we are aware, been raised.

The foregoing remarks apply, whether the imputations cast by Mr. Metcalfe on the judge, that he was in the habit of dictating to juries what verdict they were to find, that he was not a proper judge, and did not understand his business, and that public justice was not administered in his court, were or were not founded in fact—a matter on which we do not venture to express any opinion. Suppose they were, that would not justify the conduct of Mr. Metcalfe; but if they were not, then was that conduct bad indeed.

The speech, however, made by Mr. Payne on the following day, when all passion had had time to cool, was, to say the least of it, very injudicious, and open to grave observation. A counsel commits a contempt of Mr. Payne's court by insulting the judge. Mr. Payne declines to uphold his own authority by punishing the offender, because, he says, "the forbearance of a Christian judge" prevents him. But according to Mr. Payne's notions of things, although to punish, by fine or committal, a counsel who is guilty of a contempt of court, is inconsistent with that forbearance, the making a formal complaint of his conduct to the Benchers of the Inn of Court to which he belongs, is not. Being indifferent theologians, we are unable to comprehend the distinction. Mr. Payne then concludes with a public laudation of himself—a dangerous experiment at any time, but which, if a man is determined on making, he should, at least, be careful not to outstep the bounds of probability. When Mr. Payne assures us, that during the five years he has sat on the bench, in which period he tried 2500 prisoners, "not a single innocent person has been convicted, or a single guilty one received too severe a sentence, and that not one of his sentences has in any way been interfered with by the Secretary of State," he severely taxes our credulity. Until we read his remarks, we did not believe that any judge in the land—not even the most able and upright of them all—could, with truth, make the sweeping assertion, that justice had never failed in his hands, or that in this age, when interference with the decisions of judges and the verdicts of juries is the besetting sin of our rulers, not one of his sentences had ever been disturbed. If, however, such is the case with Mr. Payne, and we do not presume to deny it, nothing remains for us but to congratulate him on his singular ability, uprightness, and good fortune.

Correspondence.

ROLFE v. PERRY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—In this case (heard before Vice-Chancellor Wood on the 16th instant, and not yet reported, except in the daily journals) a rather singular question arose, and, as I venture to submit, a rather singular conclusion was arrived at by the able judge who decided it.

The question was, whether a wife, divorced à mensâ et thoro for adultery many years before her husband's death, and not subsequently reconciled to him, was entitled, under the Statute of Distributions, to share in his personal estate, which became undisposed of on the death of the residuary legatee.

It was argued, on the part of the next of kin, that she was not so entitled. The argument was rested on the authority of Pettifer v. James (Bunb. 16), where a bill, preferred by a widow who had been so divorced, for her moiety and widow's chamber, according to the customs of the city of London, was dismissed, the Court holding (without reference, so far as appears by the report, to any peculiarity under the customs of the city) that her right to distribution was forfeited; also on the authority of Shute v. Shute (Pre. Ch. 111), where administration having been granted by another party, the Master of the Rolls (Sir J. Trevor) dismissed a bill by a widow, who had been so divorced, for a share of the intestate's personal estate; and on the authority of an Anonymous case (9 Mod. 44), where, though in the first instance the Court refused to recognise any alteration in the status of husband and wife as resulting from such a divorce, it ultimately granted an interlocutory injunction to restrain a husband, who had been so divorced, from selling a term of years which he had acquired by his marriage. Cases were also cited in which the Court has refused to make a settlement, even of her own fund, on a wife who has committed adultery, either during the life or after the death of her paramour. (Ball v. Montgomery, 2 Ves. jun. 191; Curr v. Eastbrook, 4 Ves. 146). It was also further argued, on principle, that, looking to the object of the Statutes of Distributions, which was to prevent the administrator from excluding those who had equal or greater rights than himself for his own personal benefit (see Petit v. Smith, 1 P. Wms. 8, per Holt, C. J.)—to the rule in the ecclesiastical court, which, recognising, as it does, the prior claim of the wife in ordinary cases to administration, yet excludes her in cases of divorce for adultery—and to the statute law of the 13 Edw. 1, c. 34, tersely and metrically rendered by Lord Coke in the well-known Latin hexameters:—

"Sponte virum mulier fugiens, et adultera facta Dote sua careat, nisi sponsi sponte retracta;"

and to the terms of the bond embodied in the statute itself—the Statute of Distributions should not be construed to give an adulterous and divorced wife a claim to a share in an intestate's estate.

The learned Vice-Chancellor expressed his surprise that such a case should be now open to argument, and inquired of the counsel who appeared for the wife whether there were not any authorities on the other side. None other were cited; but the Vice-Chancellor ultimately, without further calling on counsel for the wife, gave judgment in her favour, resting such judgment, however, entirely on the frame of the suit, which was one instituted by a trustee for his guidance and protection, making the widow a defendant, and he appeared to intimate that the result would have been different if the widow had herself been plaintiff. The learned judge observed, that the authorities cited went no higher than this—that this Court would not assist a widow, divorced à mens et thoro for adultery, in asserting her claim to a share of her husband's personal estate. The statute provided for a certain course of distribution where there was "no wife;" he could not say there was no wife where there had been no divorce à vinculo; it could not be denied, that after a divorce for adultery she was still a wife; and as this was a case in which the wife did not as plaintiff seek the assistance of the Court, but the bill was filed by the trustee of the testator, he must declare that the widow of the testator was entitled to her distributive share.

With sincere deference to a very able judge, I venture to contend, that this judgment is unsatisfactory. If the authorities cited are not law, let them be overruled (though I may remark, that so far as regards the customs of the city of London, and the right to administration generally, the case of Pettifer v. James is treated as an authority by Williams, J.); but can it be right that the result should depend on the mere circumstance of the widow appearing as plaintiff or defendant on the record? The Vice-Chancellor has now declared that she is entitled. Suppose the trustee, in consequence of this decision, pays the money into court, could the widow obtain it on petition, and are her rights and those of the next of kin dependent on his discretion?

The case of Rolfe v. Perry is, at the suggestion of the judge himself, to go before the Court of Appeal on another and entirely distinct point relating to the applicability of Mr. Locke King's Act, with a view of settling the conflict of opinion between Vice-Chancellor Wood, in the case of Mellish v. Vallins (2 Johns. & H. 194), and the Master of the Rolls, in the case of Moore v. Moore (10 Weekly Rep. 877), and it would, I think, be desirable if the other point could be submitted to the Court of Appeal at the same time; but I am not aware that there is any present prospect of this being done.

I remain your obedient servant,
9, New-square, Lincoln's-inn, J. R.

ORDER OF COURT.

Thursday, the 12th February, 1863.

WHEREAS by reason of the growing increase of the business of this Court, the number of certificates and documents of the like nature requiring the signature of the Accountant-General has become so great as inconveniently to interfere with his discharge of other and indispensable duties; now, therefore, upon reading an act of Parliament passed in the twelfth year of the reign of his Majesty King George the First, intituled "An Act for better securing the Monies and Effects of the Suitors of the Court of Chancery, and to prevent the counterfeiting of East India Bonds, and Indorsements thereon, as likewise Indorsements on South Sea Bonds," I do order that all certificates of funds in court, and of transactions that have been recorded in the books of the Accountant-General, that is to say, payment of cash into court, sales, purchases, transfers, and acceptances of stock, and carryings over of funds from one account to another, shall be signed by the chief clerk of the Accountant-General for the time being, in his own name, as for and on behalf of the said Accountant-General.

WESTBURY, C.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday, Feb. 13.

ARRANGEMENT OF LEGAL BUSINESS—CIRCUIT REGULATION COMMISSION.

Mr. A. Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it was the intention of her Majesty's Government to take any steps in pursuance of the recommendations of the Circuit Regulation Commission, or in any way to alter the existing divisions of the judges' circuits.

Sir G. Grey said it had been deemed expedient that a change should be made with respect to the Northern Circuit, owing to the great amount of business connected with it, and that measures had been taken with a view to a division of the labour. The details of the arrangement were under the consideration of the Lord Chancellor, who was in communication with the judges on the subject.

Thursday, Feb. 19.

Mr. M'Mahon asked the Attorney-General whether her Majesty's Government proposed to bring in, and, if so, when, a measure for re-arranging any other circuit beside the northern, and for holding an assize for civil business in other counties besides Lancashire, and for removing the inconvenience of accumulating country causes for trial in London and Middlesex, and for so arranging the town sittings as not to interfere with circuits.

The Attorney-General replied, that the state of the Northern Circuit was under the consideration of her Majesty's Government, with a view to effect such re-arrangement as might seem to be expedient. But whether a measure on the subject would or would not be introduced to Parliament depended on the nature of the proposed change, for, as his hon. and learned friend knew well, the powers capable of being exercised by an Order in Council, without the intervention of Parliament, were very extensive. There was no present intention of holding a third assize for civil business in any county where one was not already held; and there was no such measures in contemplation as were referred to in the last part of the hon member's question.

Tuesday, Feb. 24.

BENCHERS' JURISDICTION AND AUTHORITY BILL.

In answer to Mr. Roebuck,

Sir G. Bowyer said it was arranged that the second reading of this bill was to be fixed, after consultation with the Solicitor-General, for some day most convenient to the Benchers. He should not, therefore, press the second reading at present.

CRIMES OF VIOLENCE.

Mr. Adderley rose to ask permission of the House to introduce a bill for providing for the further security of the persons of her Majesty's subjects from violence. The bill was a very short one, but he thought it would be effectual. The punishment provided by the existing act of 1861 for the crime of robbery and violence was penal servitude for three years and upwards, or solitary imprisonment with hard labour not exceeding two years. He proposed to make the same addition to that punishment for robbery with violence which was made by the act of 1841 to the punishment for attacks upon the Queen, and by the act of 1845 to the punishment for malicious injury of works of art—namely, corporal punishment. He did so for the same reasons, with the same object, and he was convinced with the same result, which attached to those two acts. It seemed to him that in the long and dreary vista of broken-down penal enactments those two acts stood out in striking contrast of complete success. He made this proposition in no retrograde spirit, but following precedent, proof from experience, and, he must say, the dictates of common sense. In the consolidation of the Felony and Larceny Act of 1861, corporal punishment of adults was deliberately retained in two cases, which he held belonged to the same category as robbery with violence. He attached no weight whatever to the opinion of those who opposed corporal punishment as a degrading punishment. These men argued from their own innocence to the feelings of degraded humanity. The question was not whether corporal punishment was applicable to men of honour, but to the correction of men of degraded feelings. According to the philosophy of punishment, to be effectual it must be addressed to the motives of the punished; and if there were those who would only be deterred from crime by fear of pain, it was surely far better to visit the crime with the punishment which would put a stop to its commission, rather than, by inefficient infliction, leading to the perpetual repetition of the crime and the punishment. He in no way trenchoned on the ground fenced off for the Royal Commission, instituted for inquiring into the operation of the acts on penal servitude and transportation, and the manner in which they had, or rather had not, been carried out. Even if the House was content to lay an embargo on its action, and obstruct public opinion, which was ready to act in this matter upon recent experience, the Minister could scarcely plead such an excuse who had dealt with the question himself, and made considerable alterations by circulars from his own department. He proposed not in any way to affect the operation of the two acts to which he alluded, but simply to make an addition, or he would say to supply an omission in them—namely, to add another crime to the same category. He had not only the great success of those acts to adduce in favour of his proposition, but wherever corporal punishment had been tried and was still in use, they found it had precisely the same results. He might quote the high opinion of the Duke of Wellington as to the efficiency of corporal punishments in the army; for when he gave evidence against the excessive use of that punishment, he guarded himself against being supposed in favour of its abolition. Not only for deterrence, but as an exemplary punishment in certain cases, it was absolutely necessary. As to the use of this punishment in prison for purposes of internal discipline, he could adduce the high authority of the governor of the county gaol at Stafford, who stated, that in thirteen years' experience, having had every species of ruffian under his care, however inefficient other punishments might have been, he could say, with regard to corporal punishments alone, that he never on any occasion had to repeat it a second time. He did not think public opinion in this country would be content, especially in our present extremity for efficient secondary punishments, to throw away one so effectual as this; and if it had been successful in protecting her Majesty from violence, and works of art from malicious injury, would they be acting like sensible men, if, from any feeling of unscrupulousness, based, he believed, on a perfectly false philosophy, they allowed themselves to be exposed to the most rampant violence when such an effectual remedy lay idle in their hands? He begged to move for leave to bring in the bill.

Sir G. Grey would not offer any objection to the bringing in of this bill, but must guard himself against being supposed to assent to its principle. The right hon. gentleman had not explained the manner in which he proposed to effect his proposed alteration of the law. Only a very few years ago, a select committee recommended, and the House deliberately adopted the proposition, that the punishment of flogging should be abolished in respect to offences to which it formerly attached by law, with the exception of two or three cases. The House would, therefore, have to carefully consider the grounds on which it was asked to retrace its steps. He did not collect from the right hon. gentleman's speech, whether he intended to make the infliction of corporal punishment imperative, or to rest it upon the discretion of the judge. In the latter case he would do well to remember, that there was a great difficulty when that species of punishment existed two years ago, in regard to certain offences, in getting juries to convict. When a particular judge was known to be in the habit of exercising such a discretionary power, the jury was found to be very reluctant to find the accused guilty, and so prisoners often escaped. The judges, therefore, very rarely sentenced prisoners to corporal punishment; and past experience shewed, that if they were again to be intrusted with the power of doing so, they would rarely exercise it. This bill might thus alter the theory of the law, without producing much effect on its practice. On the other hand, if the infliction of flogging was to be imperative, the right hon. gentleman had not stated whether he meant it to be a cumulative punishment, to go in all cases in addition to imprisonment and penal servitude, or in substitution for them. Again: a prisoner's health, constitution, age, or other circumstances might make it inexpedient to flog him, though he had committed an offence to which that punishment might attach. Nor had the right hon. gentleman very accurately defined the crimes to which he desired to affix this punishment. He had spoken of offences attended with violence, but it was not very clear whether he meant to include burglaries by night which involved a species of violence. Moreover, if flogging was so effectual that judges were to be compelled to inflict it, where was the line to be drawn? Was one man who knocked down another to rob him of his watch to be subject to this punishment, while another, who knocked down a woman to rob her of her virtue, was to be exempt from it? In the army and navy flogging might be necessary in certain cases; and in gaols, when violent outbreaks suddenly occurred, he believed it was the only effectual mode of suppressing insubordination; but it was quite a different thing to say that it should be inflicted on men who were to be tried by a jury of their countrymen. He would not, however, oppose the introduction of this bill, and he should be glad to hear fuller explanations from the hon. gentleman at a subsequent stage.

REMUNERATION OF JURIES.

Mr. Ayrton moved for leave to bring in a bill entitling jurymen in the metropolis to receive an allowance of 7s. each for their services whenever they are summoned to try a case which does not originate in the county in which they reside.

The Solicitor-General, on behalf of the Attorney-General, who was absent, did not oppose the introduction of the bill, but withheld his assent to its principle.

The motion was then agreed to.

WRITS' PROHIBITION.

Mr. Bowyer, in moving for leave to bring in a bill providing that without the leave of a judge no writ should be issued for actions of debt in the superior courts for sums of less than 20l., explained that the object of the measure was to remedy a grievance caused by the issue of writs from the superior courts, in numerous cases which never came to trial, and where the amount of debt sought to be recovered was not more than 2*l.* or 3*l.*, or less than the costs incurred.

The Solicitor-General said that this was undoubtedly a subject which was well worthy of consideration, and he should not oppose the second reading of the bill.

Leave was given.

THE ROAD MURDER AND THE ROUPELL CASES.—There are rumours abroad, but in a shape so misty that we forbear to comment on them, that the Road murder case is likely to be again brought forward, and also that evidence has been discovered falsifying the extraordinary confessions made by the convict Roupell.

COUNTY COURT JUDGES.—Sir Walter Riddell has been appointed a County Court Judge of Whitechapel (circuit No. 39), vice Mr. Serjeant Manning, resigned. Mr. W. Spooner has been appointed Judge of the County Court of Staffordshire (circuit No. 26), in the room of Sir Walter Riddell. Mr. E. J. Lloyd, Q. C., has been appointed Judge of the County Court of Bristol (circuit No. 54), vice W. N. Willes, deceased.

Digest Supplement, 2s.

LAW.—A Gentleman is desirous of entering as CLERK in the Office of a Solicitor of high respectability and standing in London, where the principal business is Conveyancing, with a view to a Partnership at an early date. The highest references will be given. Address to V., Mr. H. Bult, 25, New Quebec-street, Portman-square, W.

LAW.—COUNTRY PRACTICE.—WANTED, by an active, intelligent, middle-aged Man, a SITUATION as CLERK to a SOLICITOR in the COUNTRY. The Advertiser is conversant with Common-law and Chancery Practice and Conveyancing, and is competent to conduct a Practice in all those Branches, under the direction of a Principal; but not having ever filled a situation similar to that he is now seeking, would be contented to commence at a moderate salary. Address, stating full particulars, R. S., Jurist Office, 3, Chancery-lane, London.

TO SOLICITORS.—OFFICIAL ADVERTISEMENTS intended for the GAZETTES of INDIA, or the Newspapers of Australia, New Zealand, Cape of Good Hope, Canada, China, India, &c., are received by the undersigned. Copies of the Journals secured. Established 1848.—F. ALCOCK, Colonial Newspaper Agency, 11, Clement's-lane, Lombard-street.

PETTY SESSIONS PRACTICE.

Now ready, in thick 12mo., price 18s. cloth, lettered,

STONE'S PRACTICE OF PETTY SESSIONS. With the Statutes, a List of Summary Convictions, and an Appendix of Forms. Seventh Edition. By THOMAS BELL and LEWIS W. CAVE, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. With a Supplement, bringing the Statutes and Cases up to 1863. 12mo., price 18s. cloth.
"It is remarkable for a rare combination of conciseness and clearness in the composition, which have recommended it to magistrates who have not been educated as lawyers, and to whom, therefore, the books written for the use of lawyers are often obscure by reason of their technicalities. The present editors have preserved this characteristic of Mr. Stone's volume in their own abundant additions to it."—Law Times.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 7, 1863.

WHILE codification of the law is abandoned, at least for the present, and there is little to notice in the way of consolidation or amendment of it, we may well direct our attention to a somewhat analogous subject, the Order in Council of the 9th January, 1863, made under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 94, "for the Regulation of Consular Jurisdiction in the Dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte," and "the Rules of her Britannic Majesty's Supreme Consular Court, and other Consular Courts, in the Dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte," framed under that Order. These documents, drawn up, we believe, by Mr. F. S. Reilly, of Lincoln's-inn, have been recently issued; and we purpose to advert to some of the most remarkable of their provisions.

The first of these documents, namely, the Order in Council, although much in the form of an act of Parliament, and having much resemblance to a code, can hardly be looked on as such in reality; for it contains an express provision (sect. 2, art. 6), that, "subject to the other provisions of this Order, the civil and criminal jurisdiction aforesaid shall, as far as circumstances admit, be exercised upon the principles of, and in conformity with, the common law, the rules of equity, the statute law, and other law, for the time being in force in and for England, and with the powers vested in, and pursuant to, the course of procedure and practice observed by and before courts of justice and justices of the peace in England, according to their respective jurisdictions and authorities." And by the next article (art. 7), "Nothing in this Order shall be deemed to deprive her Majesty's consular officers of the right to observe and to enforce the observance of any reasonable custom obtaining within the Ottoman dominions, or to deprive any person of the benefit thereof, except where this Order contains some express and specific provision incompatible with the observance of such custom."

We proceed to the regulations with respect to juries, some of which are peculiar. In the first place, no person is qualified to sit on a jury, unless he is "able to speak and read English" (sect. 4, art. 15); the latter qualification, it is perhaps needless to remark, not being required by the common law. The jury shall consist of five, and give an unanimous verdict (sect. 4, art. 19), and it is worthy of notice, that in civil cases each party (in addition to the usual challenges for cause) may challenge three jurors peremptorily. (Id.) In a subsequent place it is provided (sect. 5, subsect. 2, art. 40), "Where a suit instituted in the Supreme Consular Court, or in a Provincial Consular Court held before a resident Legal Vice-Consul, relates to money, goods, or other property, or any civil right or other matter at issue of the amount or value of 50*l.* sterling or upwards, or is brought for recovery of damages of the amount of 50*l.* sterling or upwards, the suit shall, on the demand of either party, be tried with a jury. "In any case (except where, according to the rules of the Court, the suit is to be heard and determined in a summary way) a suit so instituted may be tried with a jury, if the Court, of its own motion or on the application of either party, thinks fit so to order. "One of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State may, by order under his hand, extend the present provision to any Provincial Consular Court not held before a resident Legal Vice-Consul, where it appears to him a sufficient jury list can be obtained."

The efforts of Lord Brougham and others to introduce courts of reconciliation and arbitration among us are well known. They are formally established in these Consular Courts by the following regulations:—

"30. Every Consular Court and its officers shall, as far as there is proper opportunity, promote reconciliation, and encourage and facilitate the settlement in an amicable way, and without recourse to litigation, of matters in difference between persons over whom the Court has jurisdiction.

"31. Every Consular Court may promote reconciliation; and encourage and facilitate the settlement, in an amicable way, of any suit or proceeding pending before it.

"32. A Consular Court may, with the consent of the parties, refer to arbitration the final determination of any suit or proceeding pending before it, or of all matters in difference between the parties, on such terms and with such directions as to appointment of an arbitrator and other things as may seem fit, and may, if it thinks fit, take from the parties, or any of them, security to abide by the result of the reference.

"In any such case the award shall be final and conclusive.

"On the application of any party a decree of the Court may be entered in conformity with the award, and such decree shall not be open to any appeal or rehearing whatever." (Sect. 5, subsect. 2, art. 30 et seq.)

And also (sect. 2, subsect. 3, art. 46), "A Consular Court may promote reconciliation and encourage and facilitate the settlement in an amicable way of proceedings for assault, or any other offence not amounting to felony, and being of a private or personal character, on terms of payment of compensation or other terms that may seem reasonable or expedient, and may thereupon order the proceedings to be stayed."

As to the general authority of the Courts, sect. 5, subsect. 2, art. 34, enacts, that "The Supreme and every other Consular Court shall be a court of law and of equity; and (subject to the other provisions of this order) shall have and may exercise all jurisdiction, power, and authority, legal, equitable, or other, which any Consul of her Majesty by custom has or may exercise in the Ottoman dominions."

The provision as to costs in criminal cases are very different from those of the laws at home.

"A Consular Court may order any person convicted before it of any crime or offence to pay all or any part of the expenses of his trial and imprisonment or other punishment.

"Where it appears to the Court that a charge is malicious, or frivolous and vexatious, the Court may order all or any part of the expenses of the prosecution to be paid by the prosecutor." (Sect. 2, subsect. 3, art. 56).

The rules framed under the Order in Council contain the following provision respecting oaths:—"On any occasion the Court may, if it thinks it just and expedient, for reasons to be recorded in the minutes of proceedings, take without oath the evidence of any person objecting on grounds of conscience to take an oath, the fact of the evidence having been so taken without oath being also recorded in the minutes of proceedings. (Sect. 13, art. 273). It will be observed that this provision, although it goes beyond the existing law, falls far short of the provisions of Sir John Trevelyan's bill.

In imitation of Jarvis's Act, the following directions are given with reference to the examination of prisoners before trial (Sect. 15, subsec. 2, arts. 323, 324):—

"After the examination of all the witnesses on the part of the prosecution is completed, the Court shall, without requiring the attendance of the witnesses, read over to the accused the depositions taken against him, and shall then say to him these words:—

'Having heard the evidence, do you wish to say anything in answer to the charge? You are not obliged to say anything unless you desire to do so, but whatever you say will be taken down in writing, and may be given in evidence against you on your trial. And I give you clearly to understand, that you have nothing to hope from any promise of favour, and nothing to fear from any threat, that may have been held out to you to induce you to make any admission or confession of your guilt, but whatever you now say may be given in evidence against you upon your trial, notwithstanding such promise or threat.'

"Whatever the accused then says in answer thereto shall be taken down in writing (Form 40), and shall be read over to him, and shall be kept with the depositions of the witnesses, and afterwards, on the trial of the accused, the same may be given in evidence against him without further proof thereof.

"Nothing in the foregoing rules, however, is to prevent the prosecutor from giving in evidence any admission, or confession, or other statement of the accused, made at any time, which would by law be admissible as evidence against him."

The length of this form appears to us very objectionable.

We wish we had time and space for further extracts. On the whole, the legislation in question—for legislation it is in reality—has been the result of much care, aided by a large acquaintance with the numerous proposals for amending the law, both successful and otherwise, which have been brought forward in modern times. Many of these proposals, some judicious, and others of a more questionable nature, have been adopted, whilst others have been, with a wise discrimination, rejected.

Correspondence.

SHALL WE REGISTER TITLE?

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—I have read with considerable disappointment the letter of your correspondent "G. L." (ante, p. 60); I say with considerable disappointment, for, writing my little book of the above title for those whom I took the liberty of calling the unlearned, I had hoped that my construction of the act in question was expressed in a manner capable of being understood by all of those for whom I wrote. Still flattering myself that my little book is intelligible to the intelligent portion of the "unlearned," I shall take the liberty, with your permission, of replying to such of "G. L.'s" observations as seem to call for a reply from me, passing over all personal matters.

I must tell your readers, for they could not at first identify it, that the act of Parliament which has the misfortune to come under "G. L.'s" castigation, is the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, popularly known as the Act for Registration of Land and Title. "G. L." starts with this question—"What is the grand principle of this act?" Hear the answer, O ye legislators, who flattered yourselves that ye were doing something grand when ye passed this act. "Is it not the substitution of abstracts of the effect of documents, for the documents themselves?"

"G. L." must excuse me for thinking that there is some larger principle in the act than the mere encouragement of concise conveyancing. I think the grand principle of the act is told in five words—Indefeasibility of title for purchasers. Parliament has, in this instance, as it constantly does, affirmed the principle of political government, that public good is to be wrought out, although by possibility a private wrong may be inflicted. To apply that principle to the present case. It being admitted that facility of dealing with land and security of title would be an undoubted public good, and that the first could be attained by registration, and the latter by a declaration of indefeasibility, but that, possibly, by giving indefeasibility an individual wrong might be committed. Parliament has said, "We will establish a mode of registration, and declare this indefeasibility of title in a purchaser, but we will hedge round, with every protection against fraud or injustice, the path to registration." This, I say, is the great principle of the act; besides this great principle, there is this corollary from it, that a person having, or supposing himself to have, some claim against, or on registered land, is not to be allowed to lie by, sleeping on this claim, or supposed claim, to the prejudice of a subsequent purchaser. This principle and this corollary is my answer to the next question of "G. L." He complains, that in the case of a will of registered land, he, we will suppose him to be a disinherited heir, must fight out his rights before the registrar, or at all events before the land is sold and transferred to a purchaser. And he asks, "Why am I bound to fight out the matter before the registrar, and convince him, or for ever after the said sale, hold my peace?" I submit the answer is self evident; and the same principle was established by the Probate Act, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, ss. 61, 62. But then "G. L." supposes the case of an ambiguously worded will; suppose, for instance, it is doubtful on the terms, whether A. is tenant in tail or only for life, remainder in fee to B., A. brings in the will, and asks to be registered as tenant in tail. B. is given notice of A.'s application, and of the time when the question will be taken into consideration by the registrar; if B. appear, he can have the question argued, neque ad nau- seam: he can go from the registrar to the judge in Chancery, thence to the Court of Appeal in Chancery, thence to the House of Lords. But "G. L." complains, that if B. choose to lie by, and allows A. to be registered as tenant in tail, he cannot after a sale raise the argument against the purchaser, that A. was only tenant in tail. Surely it is only necessary to state the proposition to be self-demolished, when we have the above principle and corollary affirmed by Parliament.

I next come to what "G. L." imagines to have been a slip of my pen, in my comment on sect. 20. I think that a little calm consideration will shew that this section is not so absurd as "G. L." imagines it to be. There are two things spoken of in sect. 20 that are as distinct as cause and effect. First, the power of a registered owner on the occasion of a sale, mortgage, &c., to convey to the purchaser an indefeasible title, although he has it not in himself; secondly, as the result of the conveyance to the purchaser, positive indefeasibility of title in the purchaser. When, therefore; the 20th section declares that, "Subject &c., the persons originally and from time to time named and described in such record of title as aforesaid, shall, for the purpose of any sale, &c., be, and be deemed to be, absolutely and indefeasibly possessed," &c., it is quite clear that those words cannot, in their primary application, be taken to speak of those who would have absolute indefeasibility in themselves, such as purchasers, mortgagees, &c., but of the applicant, or volunteers under him; therefore I excepted from the primary operation of those words purchasers, mortgagees, &c., from the less favourable position of the former, who were only to be deemed to be indefeasibly possessed; because, by the act of sale or mortgage, the purchaser or mortgagee obtains an indefeasible title. So far, then, from my exception of purchasers, mortgagees, &c., from the class of persons who are to be deemed, for the purpose of sale, mortgage, &c., indefeasibly possessed, being capable of being used as an argument, "that they have no title whatever under the act for any purpose whatever," it only goes to confirm the plain operation of the section, that purchasers, mortgagees, &c. obtain absolute indefeasibility, and therefore, as a necessary consequence from that, not as being "deemed" &c. capable of selling &c. with an indefeasible title. Omne majus in se continet minus. It is quite clear to me that "G. L." has not paid sufficient attention to the distinction between indefeasibility "deemed," and the absolute indefeasibility of a purchaser, mortgagee, &c.

"G. L." then says, "We find the author stating, that 'the applicant can never obtain an indefeasible title. He' (the purchaser from Roupell) 'would have been placed on the register probably, but the title would not become indefeasible until the property came into the hands of a purchaser subsequently for valuable consideration, without notice of the fraud.' May I ask Mr. Edwards whether such last-mentioned purchaser would have appeared in the record of title? And if so, what is meant by his exception in his commentary on sect. 20?" I answer the first of these questions by saying, of course "the last-mentioned purchaser would have appeared in the record of title" immediately, if the conveyance was effected in the office; if by ordinary deed of conveyance, so soon as it was lodged with the registrar; but the last-mentioned purchaser would have, under the 20th section, an absolute, and not a mere qualified, indefeasible title. The second of these questions has been sufficiently answered already; but I may add, that, writing for the public, I thought it better to give them the legal result of the enactment, and not to mystify them with the idea that a purchaser or mortgagee of registered land would only be deemed, for the purpose of sale, &c., indefeasibly entitled. It is manifest that the purchaser, &c. does not require this, because he gets an absolutely indefeasible title. Had I been writing a strictly legal commentary upon the 20th section, I should have said that purchasers, mortgagees, &c., who are named in the record of title, do come within the words of the section, who are to be deemed, for the purpose of sale, &c., absolutely and indefeasibly possessed; but I should have added, that they have by the same section absolute indefeasibility in themselves, and that this greater estate is not cut down by the Parliamentary fiction of being deemed, &c. The contrary of this last proposition is, I presume, "G. L.'s" notion of the effect of the section. I can imagine his arguing thus:—True, the section says that a registered owner is for the purpose of any sale, &c., to be and be deemed absolutely and indefeasibly possessed of and entitled to such estates. True, the purchaser, by the conveyance from the vendor, obtains an indefeasible estate; but the moment his name is placed on the record of title, the section says, he is for the purpose of sale, &c., to be deemed, &c.: ergo, his indefeasible estate is cut down. There might possibly be some room for this contention, if no other legal effect could be given as regards purchasers, mortgagees, &c., to the words, denoting that the person on the record of title should, for the purpose of sale, &c., be deemed, &c. But those words have clearly another and a beneficial effect upon purchasers, &c., as it renders it unnecessary for them, or volunteers under them, on the occasion of a sale, &c., to prove or shew that there had been a previous purchase. They may point to their names on the record of title, and say to the intended purchaser, "That is sufficient for you. We can, under the 20th section, convey an indefeasible title to you, whether we were purchasers for value or not." This effect of the 20th section would not be of much consequence to a purchaser, &c., who had not dealt with the estate since his purchase, but where he has, or where it has come into the hands of volunteers from him, it is of the greatest consequence, as the entry on the record of title renders it unnecessary to examine the title from the time of the last purchase. I think, therefore, the more we consider this 20th section in all its bearings, the less open is it to the strictures and doubts of "G. L." I do not wish to enter the lists with "G. L." or any other writer, in defence of the verbal structure of the clauses of this act, and agree with him that the 105th section would read better with the words "on behalf of" instead of "as against," but, as the meaning of the section is unmistakeable, the error may be pardoned; probably, it arose from the draftsman having an idea of antagonism in his mind. I have looked at "G. L.'s" former letter, referred to in his last, and have been much amused at the forlorn state of an unhappy landowner, who might venture to take a trip to the Continent, or elsewhere, for a period of three months, and on his return find his ancestral estate indefeasibly vested in a stranger.

Regretting the length to which this letter has run, I remain,

Your obedient servant,

TENISON EDWARDS.

BARRISTERS' CLERKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—The number of cases in which counsel are robbed by their clerks is apparently an increasing one. Let all solicitors make it an invariable rule to pay all fees by cheque, crossed, and drawn payable to order. This will give the Bar greater security than they now possess.

Your obedient servant,

A BARRISTER.

CHANCERY ORDER.

WHEREAS Tuesday, the 10th March next, is the day appointed for the marriage of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales: and whereas, by the 5th of the Consolidated Orders of the High Court of Chancery, rule 6, the Lord Chancellor is authorised from time to time, by special order, to direct the offices of the court to be closed on days other than those therein mentioned: I do therefore order that the several offices of this court be closed on Tuesday, the 10th March next, and that this Order be entered with the registrar, and set up in the several offices of this court.

(Signed) WESTBURY, C.

CIRCUIT REGULATION COMMISSION.

THE following letter has been addressed by the Attorney-General to the editor of The Times, with reference to the questions asked in Parliament on the subject of the Circuit Regulation Commission (ante, p. 73):—

"Sir,—In answer to Mr. McMahon's question on the subject of assizes and circuits, put to me yesterday in the House, I replied that the state of the Northern and other Circuits was under consideration by the Government, with a view to re-arrangement, &c. In the Parliamentary report in The Times of to-day, my allusion to 'other' circuits, besides the Northern Circuit, does not appear. May I beg the favour of your giving insertion to this explanation?"

"Your obedient servant,

"Temple, Feb. 20.

OFFICE OF LAND REGISTRY.

MEMORANDUM AS TO THE MODE OF PROCEEDING ON APPLICATION FOR REGISTRATION OF TITLE.

[These directions, with forms of application for registration and other forms, may be obtained on application, personally or by letter, to the Office of Land Registry, No. 34, Lincoln's-inn-fields.]

AS TO INDEFEASIBLE TITLES.

Application for Registration.

1. THE application for registration should state such particulars of the property, including the actual or estimated quantity, as that on the perusal of the abstract of title, it may be sufficiently identified with the property comprised in such abstract.

Abstracts.

2. The abstract of title should be in the usual form, but setting out in full the description of the parties to the various deeds and documents, and in all wills and voluntary instruments, and in such other documents as are not more than ten years old, the names and descriptions of the attesting witnesses. The terms of the attestation clauses to deeds and wills, executing powers should be also carefully set forth. Every instrument relating to the title, from the period fixed on for its commencement (including all mortgages and charges, even where satisfied), should be abstracted; and a short abstract should also be furnished of leases or agreements under which any of the tenants hold, any unusual provision being noticed in such abstract. The descriptions of the parcels to which the abstract relates, contained in any deed or document, should be accurately set out; but if they are afterwards dealt with in any other document by precisely the same descriptions, it will be sufficient in the abstract of such other document to state, that they are described by the same descriptions as in the former document; or, in case of variance, if the variance is slight, it will be sufficient to shew what such variance is. Every exception or reservation, heriot, quit-rent, or other charge or liability, however trifling, should be stated in the abstract. When any person succeeds as heir, so much of the pedigree as proves such heirship should be set forth. Births, deaths, and other facts of pedigree, when stated, should be accompanied by a reference to the evidence, or to that part of the schedule referred to in paragraph No. 9, which shews the evidence, by which the truth of such statement is proved.

3. If the abstract be prepared for the purposes of the application for registration, the statutory declaration or affidavit verifying the same should be made by the person who prepared it, and should shew that such person had possession of, or access to, all deeds and writings known or believed to exist relating to the property, or affecting the title, and that the abstract was prepared by him after a proper investigation and examination of such deeds and writings, and correctly shews the title to the property to the best of his judgment and belief.

4. If the abstract were not prepared for the purposes of the application, then the declaration or affidavit should shew that the solicitor lodging it has personally examined it with the original deeds and writings, and ascertained that it is correct with reference to all deeds and writings existing relating to or affecting the property. Or if there is any obstacle existing, either on the ground of expense or otherwise, to the personal examination of the original deeds and writings by the solicitor, and he can otherwise satisfactorily shew that the abstract has been properly prepared, and has on some former occasion been examined and compared with the original documents, and is a full and complete abstract of the title to the property, a declaration or affidavit satisfactorily shewing those facts will be sufficient. In that case any addition to the abstract rendered necessary by paragraph No. 2 can be made when the abstract is examined with the deeds for the purposes of registration.

5. If the abstract has been prepared or examined by, or if the actual knowledge of the facts be in the possession of, a clerk or other competent person, instead of the solicitor, the declaration or affidavit may be made by such person, and it should in that case shew that such person is from his situation competent to depose to the several facts.

6. A copy, or the original, of every map or plan drawn on, or referred to, in any abstracted document, and which is not shewn on the abstract, and also of any modern map or description of the property which may be in the applicant's possession, should be left with the abstract.

Examination of Documents.

7. The original documents referred to in the abstract will be examined, and compared therewith, by some person appointed by the registrar for that purpose. If, from any reason, any of the original documents cannot be produced, that circumstance should be distinctly stated in the abstract, and the reason for such non-production stated.

8. The original documents may be sent to this office for examination, or, if more convenient, may be produced in the country, or in any part of London. If they are lodged in the office, they will, if possible, be examined by the officers of the office, and the fee payable to the office in that case is stated in the General Orders. If they are not lodged in the office, or if it is not possible for the officers of the office to examine them, a person will be employed by the registrar to compare and examine them with the abstract, and the charges of the person so employed will have to be paid by the applicant. An undertaking of the solicitor, or of the applicant, for the payment of such charges will, in most cases, be sufficient. The expense will be the ordinary charge of a solicitor for such work. The amount will be settled by the registrar, if the parties differ^o.

Schedule of Evidence.

9. Together with the abstract, there will have to be left in this office, under the 5th of the General Orders, a list or schedule of the evidence in the possession or power of the applicant necessary to verify the title. The object of this is to prevent the expense and delay of having to make requisitions, and obtain replies on points of evidence, the answers to which are already in the power of the applicant. This list is not, however, to be a list of the deeds and documents abstracted, but should contain matters of evidence, such as certificates, declarations, &c., not set out in the abstract. No document abstracted should be inserted in this list.

Examination of Title.

10. The abstract will be laid before such one of the examiners of title as shall be nominated by the registrar for the purpose. The fee on the abstract, which will be the usual fee paid to conveyancing counsel, will have to be paid by the applicant.

11. The opinion of the examiner of title will be returned to the registrar, and such requisitions as are necessary on the title will be sent from this office to the applicant's solicitor for his replies; and any question on the requisitions will (unless referred into the judges' chambers) be decided by the registrar or assistant registrar.

Maps and Descriptions of Parcels.

12. The map and description should shew the present actual state and condition of the property as it is intended to be registered†. If this map and description are not left with the abstract, notice will be given to the applicant of the time when the same will be required to be deposited.

13. The map may be a copy of any recent and correct estate or parish map, or of the tithe map, if on a sufficiently large scale to ensure accuracy. One series of closes round the boundaries of the property should, when practicable, be shewn upon the map, and the exact position of the boundaries claimed, whether centre or side of road, fence, stream, &c., or otherwise, should be defined on the map, either in writing or by initial letters. The names of the owners and occupiers of the adjoining lands should also be written upon the map. The map and description should refer to each other by numbers. Lands situated in different parishes should be distinguished on the map, and entered separately in the description.

14. The tithe maps are lodged in the Map Department of the Copyhold Inclosure and Tithe Commission, No. 3, St. James's-square, S. W., under the charge of Lieutenant-Colonel Leach, R. E., the head of that department. Correct copies of these maps may be obtained on application at that office, at a small cost‡.

* The expense will be after the rate of two guineas per diem, and personal expenses.

† Blank schedules of parcels may be obtained at the office, to be filled up by the applicant.

‡ The costs of tracings of ordinary rural districts varies from 1s. to 2s. 6d. per 100 acres. If the tracing embraces a town or large village, or the area is small, an addition to this charge will be made in proportion to the increased labour of the draftsman.

If there be no map available of the property, it will be necessary that one should be prepared. It will be desirable, in all cases, with reference to the map of the property, to seek the advice and assistance of Colonel Leach, both on the ground of economy and accuracy.

Surveys and Notices.

15. It is necessary that the correctness of the boundaries of the property proposed to be registered, and the accuracy of the map and description of the property, should be carefully ascertained, to avoid encroachment upon the lands of adjoining owners. For this purpose, the assistance of the Map Department of the Copyhold Inclosure and Tithe Commission has been obtained, and the map and description furnished by the applicant will be sent to that department, where they will be examined, under the direction of Colonel Leach, to ascertain that they correspond with each other, and accurately represent the property*.

16. Except in cases where the registrar shall think such a course unnecessary, a person will be sent to the property itself, to verify the boundaries, and to ascertain that they are accurately defined upon the map; and, in that case, it will be necessary that the applicant should provide some intelligent person, well acquainted with the property, to accompany the person making such investigation†. And to afford the owners and occupiers of adjoining lands the opportunity of protecting themselves against encroachments, notice will be required to be given to them of such investigation, that they may attend to assist in verifying boundaries, and to give any necessary information; and notice will also be required to be given to the principal tenants or occupiers of the lands forming the boundaries of the property proposed to be registered. The notices should be prepared by the applicant, and, after being settled in this office, and stamped with its seal, should be served by him‡. Not less than three clear days' notice should be given.

17. If the service be personal, it should be proved by an affidavit or statutory declaration, which should also contain a statement that the persons served are in fact the adjoining owners and occupiers, and the principal tenants and occupiers of the boundary lands. If the service be through the post-office, it should be made by registered letters, and in such case there should be an affidavit or declaration verifying the names and addresses of the persons to be served, and the fact that they fill the characters represented; and open envelopes, duly addressed, and containing stamped notices, should be left at this office for postage, together with the amount of such postage.

18. If there should be any doubt as to who should be served with these notices, or if the persons should be very numerous, or there should be any other difficulty, the registrar will, on application to him, give the necessary directions for the service.

* The expense of this will be after the rate of 2s. 6d. per hour, according to the time actually occupied. The time required will probably vary from a few hours to two or three days, according to the degree of care and accuracy with which the documents have been prepared by the applicant, and the extent and character of the property.

† The charge of the person making the investigation will not exceed the rate of one guinea per diem, and his actual travelling expenses. The time occupied will depend upon the character, extent, and intricacy of the property, the distance travelled to the locality, the completeness of the documents furnished, the diligences used by the parties interested, and the facilities and information afforded to the person employed. A compact rural property of 500 acres should not, under ordinary circumstances, occupy more than one or two days.

‡ Blank forms of these notices may be obtained at this office. See 40th and 42nd Orders.

Particulars required by the 7th Section of the Act.

19. As soon as the registrar is satisfied with the title to the land, and the description and map have been settled and approved in draft, the particulars required by the 7th section should be furnished by the applicant, viz.—

1st. The "exact description of the lands."

This should be prepared from the draft description, as the same shall have been previously settled by the before-mentioned investigation, and should in form consist of a general description of the property, with reference to the map for the identification of the particular closes, &c. of which the property is composed.

2nd. "A statement of the persons or classes, or descriptions of persons (if any), that are or may become entitled, and of the estates, &c."

This statement should contain the particulars as the same appear from the investigation of the title, and are admitted by the applicant; or if any questions arising with reference thereto have been previously decided, then according as the same shall have been so decided.

3rd. "A statement of the mortgages, &c."

This statement should contain the mortgages, &c. as they appear from the investigation of title, and are admitted or have been decided to exist.

20. In the simple case of the applicant being the owner in fee, the particulars may be in the following form:—

Particulars under the 7th Section of the Act. Land Registry.

In the matter of the act of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53; and of the application of —, of —, in the county of —.

The following are the particulars required by the 7th section of the above-mentioned act to be furnished to the registrar:—

First, "description of the lands to be registered."

All those hereditaments known as —, in the parish of —, in the county of —, containing by admeasurement —, in the tenure or occupation of —, and more particularly described and delineated, with the boundaries thereof, in the map deposited by the said — in the Office of Land Registry, as part of the description of the same hereditaments, and therein coloured —; together with the mines and minerals under, and the rights and easements belonging to, the same hereditaments.

Secondly, "statement of the persons, &c."

The said — is entitled to the before-mentioned hereditaments for an estate of inheritance in fee-simple in possession, subject only to the incumbrance hereinafter mentioned.

Thirdly, "statement of the mortgages, &c."

The before-mentioned hereditaments are subject to a mortgage in fee, made by deed dated the — day of —, by which the same were conveyed to —, of —, to secure the sum of £— and interest, and which said sum, with some interest thereon, is now due to the said —.

21. If the registrar shall not acquiesce in the particulars furnished, he will make such alterations therein as he shall think proper, and in that case, if the applicant shall object to the same, the course of proceeding is pointed out by the 7th section of the act, and the 13th of the General Orders.

22. A fair copy of the map as approved, with a terrier containing the names and area, &c. of the several closes written on the margin thereof, will be prepared at the Office of the Copyhold Inclosure and Tithe Commission for deposit by the applicant in this office, as part of the description of the property. Such fair copy map, will, unless materially altered, in consequence of claims made after the advertisement of the intention to register the property, so as to render a fresh copy necessary, ultimately be permanently deposited in this office as part of the description of the property^o.

Advertisements and Service of Copies.

23. The notice to be advertised of the intended registration will be prepared by the applicant. The form of this notice is pointed out by the 11th and 12th sections of the act†.

24. This notice, when prepared, should be settled by the registrar, who will direct in what papers it shall be advertised. The Order directing advertisement in The London Gazette has been rescinded. The advertisement of the notice should be proved by the production of the newspapers containing the same. The notices for service, and the parties on whom such service is to be made, and the mode of service, will also be settled by the registrar on application to him for that purpose‡.

25. Tracings of the boundaries of the property, so far as they affect the respective adjoining owners and occupiers, will in most cases be required to be attached to the notices served on them. The tracings will be prepared at the office of the Tithe Commission‡. The notices will be served and verified in the manner pointed out in paragraph 17.

26. Notice of the intention to register will be required to be given also to the tenants and incumbancers of the property§, and to be settled, served, and verified in like manner as the other notices before provided for.

27. The mode of making objections to or claims on registration is pointed out by the 17th and 18th of the General Orders and the 13th section of the act. (See also the forms of objections and claims annexed to the General Orders).

Objections to Registration.

28. If any objection or claim with reference to the registration shall be lodged in this office, notice thereof will be given to applicant's solicitor.

Reference to Court.

29. If any question is referred to the Court, the mode of proceeding is pointed out by the 134th section of the act.

Searches.

30. When the title is ready to be entered on the register, such searches for judgments, &c. will have to be made as the examiner of title shall have advised, and as the registrar shall think right. These searches will be made by a person appointed by the registrar for such purpose. The charge of such person for making the searches must be paid by the applicant, and will be the ordinary charge made by a solicitor for such work. The amount will be settled by the registrar if the parties differ.

* The cost of maps on mounted paper, proper for this purpose, varies from 1d. to 2d. per acre; but if the map embraces a town or large village, or is of house property, or the area is small, an addition to these charges would be made in proportion to the increased labour of the draftsman; and in cases of extraordinary or unforeseen difficulty, it is possible that charges somewhat larger than those previously mentioned may have to be made.

† Blank forms of these notices may be obtained at this office.

‡ As to costs of tracings, see note to paragraph 14.

§ Forms may be obtained at this office.

Generally.

31. It is impossible to give general directions which shall apply to all cases, but the assistance of this office with reference to the preparation and service of notices, and any other matter affecting the registration, will at all times be readily afforded.

Registration by Solicitors in the Country.

32. The registration of titles may be effected by solicitors in the country by correspondence with this office. It is obvious, however, that there may be occasions, in the course of the examination of a title, when personal communication with the solicitor will be necessary, and in such cases the attendances of the solicitor will be required.

AS TO TITLES NOT INDEFEASIBLE.

33. The form of application for registration without an indefeasible title will be the same as that of the application for registration with an indefeasible title, mutatis mutandis^o. The evidence required by the 25th section of the act, and any other evidence, by means of which the applicant purposes to satisfy the registrar of his title to be registered, should be lodged in this office. The before-mentioned provisions for ascertaining and identifying the lands will be applicable. No advertisements, however, of the intention to register will be necessary. It may be observed, with respect to applications for registration without an indefeasible title, that the registrar, in defining the period at which an indefeasible title shall arise, must be guided by the length of time during which the applicant shall shew that he has, or those through whom he claims have, been in possession as owner or owners in fee-simple.

AS TO LEASEHOLD ESTATES.

34. The mode of proceeding for the registration of the title to leasehold estates will be the same as that before pointed out as to registration of indefeasible titles. As, however, no indefeasible title will extend to the lessor or grantor, it will not be necessary to deduce such last-mentioned title. The notice required by the 19th of the General Orders to be given to the lessor or grantor, or his representatives, should be prepared and served, and the service thereof proved in like manner as the other notices before provided for.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday, Feb. 23.

THE LAW OF LUNACY.

Mr. Butt asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention had been called to the recent case of Hall v. Semple, in the Court of Queen's Bench, and whether it was his intention to propose any alteration in the law relating to certificates required in cases of alleged insanity.

Sir G. Grey said that the case in question did not, in his opinion, or that of the Lunacy Commissioners, disclose any necessity for the alteration of the law.

* Forms of application for registration may be obtained at this office.

JURIDICAL SOCIETY.—The anniversary meeting of this society took place at its rooms, 4, St. Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square, on Monday, the 23rd February. In the unavoidable absence of the Lord Chancellor (the president of the society) and of Lord Stanley, who was expected to preside, the chair was taken by Mr. Joshua Williams. The society then proceeded to elect its officers for the ensuing year, after which an able address was delivered by the chairman on its present state and prospects, who, among other things, adverted to the discussions that had recently taken place in it on several important questions of international law, and also on the treatment of criminals. Mr. Westlake, Mr. C. Hake, Mr. Clerk, the Hon. R. Bourke, and Mr. W. M. Best having adverted to certain subjects likely to be brought before the society during the ensuing year, the meeting adjourned.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.—A meeting of this society took place at its rooms, 3, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, on Monday, Feb. 16; Henry G. Allen, Esq., in the chair. Mr. Serjeant Woolrych read a paper on "The European Conventions with respect to Domicil." After some observations by Mr. Charles Clark and the chairman, a discussion followed upon the Report of the Special Committee on the "Marriage Laws of the United Kingdom." Mr. Hastings moved that the Report of the Committee be adopted. The motion was seconded by Mr. Clark, and, after some observations by the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, M.P., Mr. Teulon, Mr. Rosher, Mr. Palmer, and Mr. Lefevre, unanimously carried.

The Right Hon. Sir William Erle, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, has appointed the following gentlemen to be Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women:—Zachariah Mellor, of Rochdale, Lancashire, in and for the county of Lancaster; William Bevan, of No. 6, Old Jewry, in the city of London, in and for the city of London, also in and for the county of Middlesex, and the city and liberties of Westminster; Frederick Sharpley, of Louth, Lincolnshire, in and for the parts of Lindsey, in the county of Lincoln; James Samuel Bourne, of Dudley, Worcestershire, in and for the county of Worcester; James Powell, of Pocklington, Yorkshire, in and for the East Riding of the county of York; George Bailey, of Luton, Bedfordshire, in and for the county of Bedford; Alfred Alderson, of Eckington, Derbyshire, in and for the county of Derby; Edward Hillman, of Lewes, Sussex, in and for the county of Sussex; Charles Hamilton, of Emsworth, Hampshire, in and for the county of Hants; Charles Alexander Adamson, of North Shields, Northumberland, in and for the county of Northumberland; Harry James Davis, of Leicester, in and for the county of Leicester; and Andrew Tucker, of Charmouth, Dorsetshire, in and for the county of Dorset.

COMMISSIONER TO ADMINISTER OATHS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Henry Wing, Gent., of Nottingham, to be a Commissioner to administer oaths in the High Court of Chancery in England.

The Supreme Court of New South Wales has appointed William Chubb, Gent., of No. 14, South-square, Gray's-inn, London, in the county of Middlesex, a Commissioner of that Court for taking affidavits and examining witnesses, at law or in equity, in all proceedings pending or to arise in the said Court.

The Solicitors' Journal of the 14th February, 1863, says that in the case of Mr. C. B. Claydon, who was disbarred last year by the Benchers of Lincoln's-inn (8 Jur., N. S., part 2, p. 134), the judges have, on appeal, confirmed the decision of the Benchers.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 14, 1863.

ALTHOUGH an assignment of non-existing property, to be acquired at a future time, will at law pass nothing (Robinson v. Macdonald, 5 Mau. & S. 228), it has in equity been laid down, by a long series of authorities, that an assignment of such property, if for valuable consideration, is effectual in equity. (In re Ship Warre, 8 Price, 269, note; Curtis v. Auber, 1 J. & W. 526; Douglas v. Russell, 4 Sim. 524; S. C., 1 My. & K. 488; Langton v. Horton, 3 Beav. 464; 1 Hare, 549; Lindsay v. Gibbs, 22 Beav. 522).

A recent case in the House of Lords (Holroyd v. Marshall, 9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 213) deserves a most careful perusal; not so much on account of anything novel there laid down, but for the singularly lucid and satisfactory manner in which the Lord Chancellor enunciates the principles by which courts of equity are guided in their decisions with reference to the doctrine of equitable assignments.

In Holroyd v. Marshall, it appears that in September, 1858, the appellants were the owners of certain machinery and implements in a mill and buildings, of which one Taylor had taken a lease. Taylor contracted with the appellants for the purchase of the machinery and implements, at the sum of 5000*l.*, but being unable to pay the money, the appellants, by an indenture of mortgage, dated the 20th September, 1858, assigned the machinery and implements (of which a list and description were contained in a schedule annexed to the mortgage) unto one Brunt, upon trust for Taylor until the appellants should have demanded, in writing, payment of the money due to them; and from and after such demand, upon trust, if Taylor should pay the said sum of 5000*l.*, with interest, to assign the property to Taylor; but if default should be made in payment, upon trust to sell the property, receive the proceeds, and apply the same, after payment of expenses, in discharge of the money due to the appellants, and the surplus to Taylor. The deed contained a covenant by Taylor to insure the property, and also a covenant that all machinery, implements, and things which, during the continuance of the security, should be fixed or placed in or about the mill and buildings, in addition to, or substitution for, the premises, or any part thereof, should be subject to the trusts, powers, provisoes, and declarations thereinbefore declared and expressed concerning the premises, and that Taylor would, at the request of the appellants, do all necessary acts for insuring such added or substituted machinery, implements, and things, so that the same might become vested accordingly. This deed was duly registered under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36.

At various times prior to the 2nd April, 1860, portions of the machinery comprised in the schedule to the mortgage deed were sold, and other machinery added and substituted by Taylor.

An account, in writing, of the effects so added and substituted was delivered by Taylor to the appellants before the 2nd April, 1860; and on that day the appellants served Taylor with a demand, in writing, for payment of the 5000*l.*, and interest thereon.

On the 14th April, and subsequently, the machinery and effects of Taylor in the mill were seized by the sheriff under writs of execution issued on judgments recovered against Taylor subsequently to the mortgage. It was held by the House of Lords (affirming the decision of Sir J. Stuart, V.C. (6 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 831), and reversing the decision of Lord Chancellor Campbell, that the appellants, as against the judgment creditor, were entitled, not only to the machinery originally comprised in the bill of sale, but also to the machinery added and substituted since the date of the mortgage.

That the decision of the House of Lords and Vice-Chancellor Stuart is in strict accordance with the principles laid down in the former decisions of the courts of equity there can be no doubt; nor can there be any doubt that Lord Chancellor Campbell, in arriving at a contrary conclusion, was influenced by his recollection of the doctrines of common law, in which no judge was ever better versed, and not sufficiently mindful of the principles of equity jurisprudence, in the administration of which, notwithstanding a constant affectation of familiarity, he by no means unfrequently gave evident signs of a recent novice.

The question in Holroyd v. Marshall, as it came before the House of Lords, lay within a small compass. It was, in fact, admitted that the judgment creditor had no title as against the machinery originally comprised in the bill of sale; and it was also admitted, that if a valid assignment could be made in equity of the machinery added and substituted after the bill of sale, it would fall within the same category as the original machinery, and could not be taken in execution by the judgment creditor. The argument urged on behalf of the judgment creditor was, the appellants had nothing more than an inchoate title, requiring some further act to perfect it, such as a new deed of assignment; and that the judgment creditor having, by means of the sheriff, seized the machinery, he had rendered his title perfect before the appellants had done so, and was, therefore, entitled to priority over them. The Lord Chancellor, in giving his judgment in favour of the appellants, said, that in equity it is not necessary, for the alienation of property, that there should be any formal deed of conveyance. A contract for valuable consideration, by which it is agreed to make a present transfer of property, passes at once the beneficial interest, provided the contract be such as a court of equity will decree specific performance of, the vendor becoming a trustee for the vendee. And, after some striking illustrations of the doctrines of equity upon this subject, his Lordship thus disposes of the arguments of the counsel for the judgment creditor:—"It is quite true," said his Lordship, "that a deed which professes to convey property which is not in existence at the time, is, as a conveyance, void at law, simply because there was nothing to convey. So, in equity, a contract which engages to transfer property which is not in existence, cannot operate as an immediate alienation, merely because there is nothing to transfer. But if a vendor or mortgagor agree to sell or mortgage property, real or personal, of which he is not possessed at the time, and he receives the consideration for the contract, and afterwards becomes possessed of the property answering the description in the contract, there is no doubt that a court of equity would compel him to perform the contract, and that the contract would in equity transfer the beneficial interest to the mortgagee or purchaser immediately on the property being acquired. This, of course, assumes that the supposed contract is one of that class of which a court of equity would decree the specific performance. If it be so, then immediately, on the acquisition of the property described, the vendor or mortgagor would hold it in trust for the purchaser or mortgagee, according to the terms of the contract."

The ultimate decision of the case of Holroyd v. Marshall is an instance of "the glorious uncertainty of the law," especially as administered occasionally in the House of Lords.

From what appears in the judgment of Lord Wensleydale, a mere accident only prevented the decision of the House of Lords being just the reverse of what it was.

The history of the case is as follows:—It was heard first by Sir J. Stuart, V.C.; afterwards by Lord Campbell, who reversed the decision of the Vice-Chancellor; it then came for the first time, upon appeal, before the House of Lords, when Lord Campbell was Chancellor, the other law Lords being Lord Wensleydale and Lord Chelmsford; all of whom, eminent as they are known to be for their knowledge of the principles and practice of common law, have not had the same experience, and, we may safely assume, had not acquired an equal familiarity with the doctrines of courts of equity.

Lord Campbell, it appears, with that extraordinary industry which he possessed, immediately after the argument committed his opinion to paper. He adhered, we might almost say of course, to the opinion which he had expressed in the court below; and Lord Wensleydale agreeing with him, a majority of the House would have been in favour of the decision of Lord Campbell, and Lord Chelmsford, who was the only other law Lord present, but who dissented from the judgment of Lord Campbell, would have been in a minority.

Lord Campbell, however, died before the judgment of the House was actually given; a second argument took place, under the presidency of his successor on the woolsack, and the result is, instead of a judgment of the House of Lords which would have been most embarrassing to all practitioners in courts of equity, we have one which not only does justice between the parties to the suit, but is in strict accordance with those principles of equity upon which former judges in the Courts of Chancery have invariably proceeded, and which are laid down and illustrated by the present Lord Chancellor with a force and clearness which, we may venture to affirm, will prevent even common-law Chancellors from going wrong upon the same subject.

THE ARRANGEMENT CLAUSES OF THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1861.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Will you allow one who is nervously affected by every threat of law reform while the seals are in their present custody, to suggest the expediency of trusting rather to the judicature than to the Legislature.

ture for the depuration of Lord Westbury's muddy arrangement clauses. There can be no doubt that the judges are competent to fasten some construction upon the most arrant nonsense that even the Lord Chancellor's draftsman can compose—and the advantage of a judicial interpretation is, that it will certainly be intelligible and precise—while nothing but further confusion is to be expected from a legislative exposition, at least such as we are likely to get.

If it is expedient, and was intended, to enable a majority of creditors to bind the minority to a composition, there is no reason to despair of the result under the existing law, or rather text. Walker v. Adcock (8 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 518; 7 H. & Norm. 541) is not an authority of much weight in favour of the necessity of a cessio bonorum; for only the Chief Baron wholly, and Martin, B., mainly, relied on the omission of that as an objection to the deed, while Wilde, B., declared his opinion to be, that no such provision was necessary; and Bramwell, B., declined to express any opinion on the matter, the deed being clearly invalid because its benefits were confined to the creditors who executed it.

The deed before Lord Westbury, in Ex parte Morgan (32 L. J., Bank., 15), did not suggest the question. It was a deed of assignment of the debtor's personal estate, in trust for such of the creditors as should execute the deed within twenty-eight days, and was not duly registered. The judgment of the Lord Chancellor is not without interest from a certain point of view; but it does not contain even an obiter dictum on the question under consideration, to reach which his Lordship had to go very far out of his way.

In Goddan v. Shettle (32 L. J., Bank., 37) the deed was a deed of composition limited to the executing creditors, and was not executed by the requisite majority, secured debts being reckoned, as it is settled must be done. Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, L. J., expressed a hope that the revision of the act, when it took place, would not be narrow in its range. Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., also considered that the exclusion of non-executing creditors from the benefit of the deed was a fatal objection; but neither judge expressed any opinion as to the necessity of a cessio bonorum. That question was discussed before them in Ex parte Rawlings (32 L. J., Bank., 27), but the case did not raise the point, and was of course decided on a different ground. Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., however went out of his way to discuss the general question, and stated his conclusion to be, that as new provisions in different language were substituted for the arrangement clauses in the act of 1849, an alteration was intended, and that deeds of composition, being within the general terms of the 192nd section, were not excluded by any of the special provisions in that section, which were to be referred distributively to the several kinds of arrangement to which they were appropriate.

Lastly, in Foot v. Woods (9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 178) the deed was limited to the executing creditors, and contained a covenant by each creditor to indemnify the debtor against bills and notes of the debtor negotiated by the creditor; which was held to be unreasonable, and the Court expressed no opinion on the general question.

The concession made by the counsel for the plaintiff in the last cited case, that, after the recent decisions, the necessity of a cessio bonorum could not be maintained, was gratuitous; for, as Wightman, J., observed, the matter is at present at large, unaffected by any direct decision.

But the decisions on the 224th section of the act of 1849, though indirect, are strong and conclusive authorities against the construction which has been suggested in the Court of Chancery, for the repealed enactment is much more capable of that construction than the present one. The material part of the 224th section ran thus:—

"Every deed or memorandum of arrangement, now or hereafter entered into between any such trader and his creditors, and signed by or on behalf of six-sevenths in number and value of those creditors whose debts amount to 10% or upwards, touching such trader's liabilities, and his release therefrom, and the distribution, inspection, conduct, management, and mode of winding up of his estate, or all or any of such matters, shall &c."

It was at first considered that the words "all or any of such matters," referring, as they clearly did, to the trader's liabilities and his release, as well as to the dealings with his estate, destroyed the effect of the copula "and," which occurred twice in the antecedent part of the sentence, and let in deeds of composition merely. But the decision of the Queen's Bench in Tilley v. Taylor to that effect was reversed in the Exchequer Chamber, not because the grammatical construction of the sentence required a different construction, but because the provision in sect. 228, that the creditors under such deeds should have the same rights of set-off, mutual credit, lien, and priority, and in respect of joint and separate assets as in bankruptcy, which could not apply to a composition deed.

The 192nd section of the act of 1851 enacts, that "every deed or instrument made or entered into between a debtor and his creditors, or any of them, or a trustee on their behalf, relating to the debts or liabilities of the debtor, and his release therefrom, or the distribution, inspection, management, and winding up of his estate, or any of such matters, shall be as valid and effectual, and binding on all the creditors of such debtor, as if they were parties to, and had duly executed, the same, provided the following conditions be observed."

The material variations from the language of the repealed section are, first, the introduction of the words "or any of them," referring to the creditors—words which the judges, including Lord Westbury himself, are obliged to strike out in order to bring the operation of the clause within moderate limits of absurdity; secondly, the substitution of "or" for "and," effecting a grammatical disjunction between the reference to the debtor's release from his liabilities, and the reference to the dealings with his estate; and, thirdly, the omission of the words "or all or," which were superfluous in the former enactment, but are necessary here, in order to include a deed relating both to the debtor's release and to the dealing with his estate.

Bramwell, B., might well ask, "If the old law was intended to continue, why was any alteration made in the language used? If the law was intended to be altered, why was not the alteration made in plain and unambiguous language?"

The object of the provision is to bind a non-assenting minority of the creditors. To what? Of course, to the release of the debtor. There can be nothing else to bind them to. There was no need to bind them to accept a dividend out of the estate. Then, if it was intended that any arrangement for releasing the debtor should be binding on all if sanctioned by three-fourths, why say anything about the consideration—the distribution of the estate? Obviously, the distribution of the estate by some means, either under inspection or by trustees, was intended to be an essential part of the arrangement. The assertion, that the decision in Tilley v. Taylor nullified the beneficial operation of the repealed claims, is contrary to the fact. After that decision (1853) the requisites to the validity of a deed of arrangement were well understood. Almost every merchant who failed in the great crisis of 1857 arranged with his creditors under the sixth-seventh clauses, by agreeing to wind up his estate under inspection. No inconvenience arose from the necessity of agreeing to distribute the whole of the assets, because the executing creditors, either by a clause in the deed expressly charging their own dividends, or verbally, authorised the inspector to make a reasonable allowance to the debtor, and the few creditors who dissented received their dividends without deduction on account of that allowance. The only practical objection to the repealed provisions was the difficulty of obtaining the assent of so large a proportion of the creditors as six-sevenths, but it was never intended by the Legislature to enable three-fourths of the creditors to bind the minority to a mere composition, leaving the debtor in the undisturbed possession of his assets. The repealed clauses extended to traders only, whose dealings are generally well known to their creditors; but the new clauses extend to non-traders, whose character and conduct may be unknown to the greater part of their creditors, and who have every facility for misrepresenting their means, and manufacturing a majority of fictitious creditors.

The language of the new enactment being inconclusive, or rather, perhaps, nonsensical, let us turn to the context. The deed is not to be binding unless the deed be registered, and there be delivered to the registrar a statement "of the amount in value of the property and credits of the debtor comprised in such deed," and "immediately on the execution thereof by the debtor, possession of all the property comprised therein, of which the debtor can give or order possession, be delivered to the trustees." And no deed shall be registered unless it bear a stamp, denoting the payment of a duty on the value of the estate and effects comprised in, or to be collected or distributed under, such deed." After the registration of every such deed, the debtor and creditors and trustees "shall, in all matters relating to the estate and effects of such debtor, be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Bankruptcy, and shall respectively have the benefit of, and be liable to, all the provisions of this act, in the same and like manner as if the debtor had been adjudged a bankrupt," &c. The inference is irresistible, that the Legislature, though it was not critical as to language, did not intend to give validity to anything but a cessio bonorum. It must never be forgotten that this wretched "Bankruptcy Law Amendment Act" is to be regarded, not as the work of an intelligent lawyer, expressing in apt terms a well-considered design, but as the failure of a clumsy and ignorant workman, acting under the direction of an equally incompetent foreman, accepted and adopted by their employer before its defects were recognised. The intention of the Legislature was not to pass these clauses, but to pass something having the effect which they were supposed to express.

The Lord Chancellor's judgment in Ex parte Morgan, which has been printed at the expense of the Bankruptcy Court for the edification of the officials, but without any statement of the case, is remarkable, though not in the way in which the judgments of eminent judges are usually remarkable. It suggests, that "it seems to have been the intention of the framers of sect. 192, in the act of 1851, to avoid the same result, in point of decision, as that which was the consequence of Telley v. Taylor." Telley v. Taylor was decided on this view of the case [statute], that words of release being conjoined with words of distribution, the winding up of the estate rendered every deed void that did not contain in it provisions for the distribution of the entirety of a bankrupt's [trader's] estate." It is very plain that his Lordship did not understand the ground of the decision in Telley v. Taylor, which, like that in the prior case of Drao v. Collins (6 Exch. 670), was not founded on the language of the clause, but on inference from the surrounding provisions.

Although his Lordship only surmises the object of the 192nd section, he tells us, apparently from certain knowledge, that the 194th section (for registering other deeds as well as those within the 192nd) "was introduced with a double view;" first, to avoid any injury from such deeds of composition; "another object for the enactment was, that it was felt that possibly many deeds of composition might not be perfected in manner required by the 192nd section, within the twenty-eight days, and that all the creditors might afterwards be willing to accede to such a deed, and therefore the power [obligation] was given to register under the 194th section a deed that did not exactly comply with the requisites of the 192nd section." The feeling vented itself in a strange way, seeing that the effect of registration under the 194th section is not to add any force or effect to the deed, or to confer any rights on the debtor or on his creditors, but simply to give notice of the existence of the deed to those who search the registry; for no advertisement is required; and, according to the Lord Chancellor, the registration of the deed does not confer jurisdiction on the Court of Bankruptcy under sect. 197.

The most surprising revelation on the subject of this 194th section is to come. The fourth condition of the 192nd section is, that within twenty-eight days the deed shall be "left" (I should say "produced and left") "at the office of the chief registrar, for the purpose of being registered." It is to be left with the chief registrar, for the purpose of being registered; of course in the Court of Bankruptcy. And sect. 193 prescribes the mode of registration. Sect. 194 directs, that "every deed, instrument, or agreement whatsoever, by which a debtor makes an arrangement with his creditors (including, therefore, deeds within sect. 192), shall, within twenty-eight days, "be registered in the Court of Bankruptcy; and, in default thereof, shall not be received in evidence."

The Lord Chancellor says, "Now, the registration required (by sect. 192) is a very peculiar form:" the peculiarity being, that the date, name, and occupation of the parties (other than the creditors), and a short statement of the nature and effect of the deed, are to be entered by the registrar in a book to be kept exclusively for the purpose of such registration; and this very peculiar mode of registration having been described in the 193rd section, is not again described in the next section, which, like the 192nd, prescribes registration in the Court of Bankruptcy; yet his Lordship declares, that "the registration under the one section is very different from the registration under the other section." The consequence of this distinction without a difference would be, that as the 194th section extends to every deed which is within the 192nd section (every deed "whatsoever"), all deeds intended to bind non-assenting creditors, and to be received in evidence, must be doubly registered—namely, in the book required by the 193rd section to be kept exclusively for the purposes of such registration as is mentioned in sect. 192, and also in

* Let us stop to admire, though we may not understand, this language. The same result, in point of decision, as that some different book, and in some other way not defined by the act. Hitherto, in practice, under his Lordship's Orders, there has not been a double registration, so that all the deeds which have been registered in the chief registrar's exclusive book are inadmissible in evidence, except, as the Lord Chancellor has lately decided, for the purpose of establishing an act of bankruptcy.

Another dictum in this judgment is, that though a deed of arrangement cannot bind non-assenting creditors unless it extends to all the creditors, yet a deed providing "for all the creditors, with a subsequent proviso imposing on the creditors the obligation of coming in within a definite time," may bind non-assenting creditors; for there are "decisions, which have held, that a proviso requiring the creditor to come in within a certain time, and execute the deed, would not, if it be not observed, avail to exclude him from the benefit of the trust." Before your readers act upon this dictum, and upon the analogous dictum of Sir J. Stuart, V. C., in Harris v. Pettit (31 L. J., Ch., 552), they will do well to read the judgment of Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., in Whitmore v. Turquand (1 Johns. & H. 444; affirmed by Lord Campbell, 3 De G., F., & J. 107), and in Nicholson v. Tutin (2 Kay & J. 18), and then consider the cases of Bloomer v. Darter (2 G. B., N. S., 165) and March v. Warneick (1 H. & Norm. 158).

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
G. S.

PUBLIC EXAMINATION.—TRINITY TERM, 1863.

THE Council of Legal Education have approved of the following rules for the public examination of the students.

The attention of the students is requested to the following rules of the Inns of Court:—

"As an inducement to students to propose themselves for examination, studentships shall be founded of fifty guineas per annum each, to continue for a period of three years, and one such studentship shall be conferred on the most distinguished student at each public examination; and further, the examiners shall select and certify the names of three other students who shall have passed the next best examinations; and the Inns of Court to which such students belong may, if desired, dispense with any terms, not exceeding two, that may remain to be kept by such students previously to their being called to the Bar. Provided that the examiners shall not be obliged to confer or grant any studentship or certificate unless they shall be of opinion that the examination of the students they select has been such as entitles them thereto."

"At every call to the Bar those students who have passed a public examination, and either obtained a studentship or a certificate of honour, shall take rank in seniority over all other students who shall be called on the same day."

"No students shall be eligible to be called to the Bar who shall not either have attended during one whole year the lectures of two of the Readers, or have satisfactorily passed a public examination."

RULES FOR THE PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF CANDIDATES FOR HONOURS, OR CERTIFICATES ENTITLING STUDENTS TO BE CALLED TO THE BAR.

An examination will be held in next Trinity Term, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship or honours, or of obtaining a certificate of fitness for being called to the Bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name at the treasurer's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs on or before Tuesday, the 12th day of May next; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship or other honourable distinction, or whether he is merely desirous of obtaining a certificate preliminary to a call to the Bar.

The examination will commence on Tuesday, the 19th day of May next, and will be continued on the Wednesday and Thursday following.

It will take place in the Benchers' Reading-room of Lincoln's-inn; and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order:—

Tuesday morning, the 19th May, at half-past nine, on Constitutional Law and Legal History; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on Equity.

Wednesday morning, the 20th May, at half-past nine, on Common Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on the Law of Real Property, &c.

Thursday morning, the 21st May, at half-past nine, on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, a paper will be given to the students including questions bearing upon all the foregoing subjects of examination.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, during the same hours, and on the same subjects, as those already marked out for the examination by printed questions, except that on Thursday afternoon there will be no oral examination.

The oral examination of each student will be conducted apart from the other students; and the character of that examination will vary, according as the student is a candidate for honours or a studentship, or desires simply to obtain a certificate.

The oral examination and printed questions will be founded on the books below mentioned, regard being had, however, to the particular object with a view to which the student presents himself for examination.

In determining the question whether a student has passed the examination in such a manner as to entitle him to be called to the Bar, the examiners will principally have regard to the general knowledge of law and jurisprudence which he has displayed.

A student may present himself at any number of examinations until he shall have obtained a certificate.

Any student who shall obtain a certificate may present himself a second time for examination as a candidate for the studentship, but only at one of the three examinations immediately succeeding that at which he shall have obtained such certificate; provided, that if any student so presenting himself shall not succeed in obtaining the studentship, his name shall not appear in the list.

Students who have kept more than eleven terms shall not be admitted to an examination for the studentship.

THE READER ON CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND LEGAL HISTORY will expect candidates for honours to be well acquainted with the origin and progress of our Laws and Constitution, as explained in chap. 8, part 3, of Hallam's History of the Middle Ages.

He will expect them to be well acquainted with the Great Charter (on which they will find an excellent Commentary in Sullivan's Lectures, 39, 40, 41, 42, and 43, pp. 343 to 381), with the chapters in Hallam's Constitutional History, which contain an account of the reigns of Henry VII, Henry VIII, Elizabeth, the Stuarts, William III, and Anne; with the State Trials in the reign of Henry VIII, of the Duke of Buckingham, in Mary, of Throgmorton; the remarkable Trials during the reigns of the Stuarts and William III; with the History of the Law of Treason, Libel, and of the Tenure of Land, down to the beginning of this century.

He refers those candidates especially to the 26th, 27th, 28th, and 29th chaps. in the 3rd vol. of Lord Brougham's Political Philosophy, to the close of the 23rd chap. of Hume's History, vol. 3, p. 296, 8vo. ed., the passage beginning "Thus far have we pursued the History of England," &c.; to the 3rd vol. of Millar's History; to the Preface to Gilbert on Uses, by Lord St. Leonards; the Preface to the State Trials; the 5th chap. of the 2nd vol. of Blackstone's Commentaries (edition in which the text is preserved); and chaps. 1, 2, and 3 of Mr. Justice Foster's Work on the Crown Law.

All candidates will be expected to know the principal events in English History from the Conquest to the Accession of George III; to have an accurate knowledge of the reigns of the Stuart Kings, of Magna Charta, the Petition of Right, the Bill of Rights, the Law of Treason, and the Act of Settlement.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 21, 1863.

MR. ADDERLEY'S bill for inflicting corporal punishment on persons convicted of garotting and similar offences was, on the 11th instant, carried by a majority of 131 to 68. The bill was supported by the proposer, and also by Mr. Hibbert, Colonel North, and Sir S. Northcote; and was opposed by Mr. Hadfield, Mr. Clay, and Sir George Grey (the Home Secretary). The former urged the miserable insufficiency of the criminal law to preserve the lives and persons of the Queen's subjects from the cruel and cowardly mode of highway robbery which has become domiciled among us; and that those who pursue that mode are so thoroughly degraded in moral sense, the motives which actuate them so low, and their sense of distinguishing between right and wrong so degraded, that they can be deterred from crime solely by forcible appeals to their fear of physical pain. They further urged, that this punishment has been found efficacious, under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 51, in putting a stop to a practice that was then growing up, of committing assaults on the Queen, not with any treasonable intent, but from a morbid appetite for notoriety at any price.

The opponents of the bill differed in the grounds of their opposition to it. One member (Mr. Clay) denied the existence of any exceptional state of things to call for legislation, and spoke of the recent cases of garotting as mythical. He informed the House, that he had dined on Sunday last with three experienced police magistrates, one of whom assured him that no case of garotting, pure and simple, ever came under his notice; and they all told him they were unaware of any increase in this class of crime. To this display of credulity, Sir S. Northcote replied, "It has been said we are legislating on panic, and that many of the garotting cases have been exaggerated. But what of those which have been tried by judges and juries? In the November Sessions at the Central Criminal Court, twenty-seven persons had been indicted, and twenty-four convicted, for robbery attended by violence in the streets of London;" and it proved too much even for the Home Secretary (to whose speech we shall presently advert), who said, "The right hon. gentleman said there were, during the last six months of 1862, an unusual number of robberies of violence in the streets of London. His hon. friend who had just sat down had adverted to some of these cases; and he must say, after having investigated them, that there had been great exaggerations in very many of the cases alleged to have occurred. He could not go so far as his hon. friend, and say that there was, during last year, no exceptional class of crimes. There were a considerable number, far above the usual number, of robberies with violence in the streets of London." Others objected to the punishment of flogging, as "cruel, barbarous, and antiquated," and argued, with much plausibility, and, we are inclined to think, with truth, that it would be found inefficient for its purpose. Others, including the Home Secretary, urged, that as a Royal Commission is now sitting on the subject of the treatment of criminals, legislation at the present moment is ill timed—an argument which would have much more force if we could feel assured that that commission would form its judgment on original and unsuspected evidence, and not on the testimony of interested or prejudiced officials, or their loose and fallacious statistics.

The Home Secretary further urged, in opposition to the bill, that he objected to it, because two years ago the criminal law of the country was revised and consolidated, after the bills for that purpose had undergone the mature consideration of a committee, on which sat a number of legal gentlemen, and several members of great experience, as chairmen of quarter sessions. The House ought to examine well the grounds on which they were asked within two years to alter a very material portion of that law after it had been deliberately sanctioned on the unanimous recommendation of that committee, and he said, not that they ought not to retrace their steps if wrong, but that they ought to be well satisfied that they were wrong before they reversed the decision to which they then came. Admitting the correctness of this latter proposition, the question is, is there not ample evidence to shew that the action of the Legislature on that occasion proceeded on grounds at least questionable. There is this special reason for not applying the principle "vestigia nulla retrorsum" in this instance. When the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, abolished capital punishment for highway robbery, with violence, and some other heinous offences, and substituted penal servitude for life, or a less period, or a term of imprisonment for it, the Legislature most probably (or at least the major part of its members) had not present to its view the fact, that those punishments would not be carried out; but that, in accordance with a rule of prison discipline, penal servitude for life meant penal servitude for fifteen years, unless the convict committed fresh crime, by misconducting himself in prison; with analogous diminution of shorter periods; and that even before the expiration of these reduced periods, the Secretary of State might, and probably would, through the agency of a ticket-of-leave, let him loose on society. If not, here was legislation under a false impression of facts.

The Home Secretary further argued against the bill thus:—"He believed there was a fashion in crime, and the publicity which was given to attacks on members of that House had actually prompted the commission of similar outrages—just as one or two persons throwing themselves from the Monument or the Duke of York's Pillar rendered it necessary that some precautions should be taken against such suicidal acts. What was done in this case? The police were increased, a greater number went about the streets in plain cloths; a number of this class of criminals were apprehended and brought to justice. They were tried at the Central Criminal Court, in the November Sessions, and a large number of them were convicted; and the consequence was, he believed, the number of robberies with violence did not now exceed the usual amount in a course of years. Those who had been convicted were now suffering the punishment they justly deserved, and where was the necessity for Parliament to step in to alter the law? His hon. friend said this was panic legislation, but this was panic legislation after the panic had subsided." We cannot admit the position that the garotting system has been stopped for the present (and it may be nothing more) by a great increase in the police force, and if it were, an unconstitutional increase of that body is a remedy nearly as bad as the disease. It must not be forgotten that persons, seeing that the law was either unable or unwilling to protect them, took their own defence upon themselves, and went about armed; and that many others, fearful of tempting the dangers of the streets, remained in a state of virtual imprisonment at their homes.

We have witnessed with great satisfaction the result of this debate. We look on it as a deliberate protest by the House of Commons against the almost idiotic course followed by our rulers for some time past, in their dealings with criminals. But although the bill of Mr. Adderley has been successful thus far, it is by no means certain that it will pass into law, nor are we quite satisfied that it ought to do so. Not that we are, in the language of Colonel North, during the debate, "mealy mouthed about flogging a set of ruffians," but we doubt whether it is the most effective remedy for the evil. As already intimated, we think that the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, was an imprudent and uncalled-for step in legislation, and we do not think that a proposal to repeal it, and restore the common law, which punished these offences capitally, would now be met with the storm of virtuous and blind indignation which would formerly have been its lot. But if this course should be deemed not desirable, the punishment of penal servitude for life, or transportation for life, provided the sentence is carried out to the letter, is a far more proper punishment than whipping. This latter is an excellent punishment for cases under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 51, above referred to, and also for many species of crimes by juvenile offenders, as well as for violation of prison discipline; but is not, especially when in the form presented by the present bill, suited to great offences. On referring to the bill (which will be found in our present impression, p. 108), it will be seen that a person under sixteen years of age cannot receive more than twenty-five lashes with a birch rod, and if above that age may receive fifty; with what instrument is not specified. Surely, before the bill is allowed to pass, this latter part should be amended in committee; for the inflicting such an amount of punishment with a birch rod upon "a man who was capable of springing like a tiger from his lair upon an innocent pedestrian in the street, throttling him and rifling his pockets"—and the hon. gentleman might have added, disabling him for years or for life with the blow of a knuckle-duster, in order to deprive his victim of consciousness, and so prevent identification, borders on the ludicrous.

We shall anxiously watch the progress of this bill.

THE PARTNERSHIP-LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

MR. ARTHUR RYLAND, of Birmingham, has published some observations on this bill, with a view to remove prejudice, by the authority of the "eminent statesmen, lawyers, and political economists," whose evidence was given before the committee of 1851 or the commission of 1854. It would have been fairer to refer also to the eminent authorities against any restriction of the liability of partners—quite sufficient to counterbalance Mr. Ryland's witnesses, who do not agree among themselves, and with all of whom, therefore, Mr. Ryland does not find it possible to agree. For example, Mr. Baron Bramwell, when at the bar and a member of the Mercantile-law Commission of 1854, differing from his colleagues, recommended—

"That persons be allowed, as of right, to form partnerships limiting the liability of one, or more, or all of the partners."

This is not the object of the bill before us, which has been prepared under the instructions of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, nor is it an object of which Mr. Ryland approves. The bill proposes to authorise any person to lend money to a trading concern, on the terms of receiving a share in the profits (becoming thereby a limited partner), without incurring liability to the creditors of the concern beyond the amount so lent, provided that the particulars of the transaction, and of the persons concerned, are registered. The time for repaying the loan is to be fixed and registered, but may be accelerated by the death or bankruptcy of one of the general partners; and during a year after repayment, the limited partner is to be liable for the amount to the creditors. The name of the limited partner is not to be used in the firm. He is liable in full, if he receives back any part of the loan before the time. The exact observance of the distinction between capital and profits is, therefore, of vital importance to him.

There is a clause enabling any clerk, manager, or servant to receive payment in proportion to profits, without being liable as a partner, and no registration of the arrangement is required.

Mr. Ryland says, "The bill does not propose to limit the liability of any partner whose name appears on the firm as a partner. Every such partner will continue liable to the full extent of his property; and this is obviously just. The only parties whose liability we seek to limit are those who, in fact, have never been trusted." This, as we have seen, is not, or was not, the opinion of Mr. Baron Bramwell—Mr. Ryland's principal authority. On the other hand, Mr. Baron Bramwell's recommendation, that every firm sharing profits with a limited partner should use the addition "with limited liability," is not adopted, because "it was felt by commercial men to be an awkward requirement!"

Much precision of thought cannot be expected from men who deliberately propose for adoption a measure containing provisions so inconsistent as the two we have mentioned. A. desires to share in the profits of a business—say to the extent of nine-tenths, or ninety-nine hundredths—without being liable to the creditors at all; or, which is the same thing, beyond the sum of 10*l*. He may do it, the other parties concurring.

1. By registering the names and addresses of himself and the other persons concerned, the nature of the business, the firm, and the time of lending and the time for repayment of the 10*l*. He need not register the share of profits to be taken by him; or,

2. He may agree to be manager, director, clerk, or auditor of, or agent for the district of Whetstone Park for, the person or persons in whose name the business is carried on, receiving a sum in proportion to the profits (which proportion may be the proportion of 99-100ths, or even that of equality—absorbing the whole); and in this case no registration is necessary. Nor is it necessary that he should perform the duties of the office he undertakes to any greater extent than may suit his convenience.

The conditions, therefore, annexed to the provisions in favour of the lending partner, are an empty form.

If the members of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, and the other advocates of limited liability, instead of echoing Mr. Baron Bramwell's hasty opinion, that the decision in Waugh v. Carver was erroneous (an opinion which he has never ventured to act upon judicially), would take the trouble to consider the principles of mercantile liability, they would, perhaps, see that they are seeking to establish a mischievous anomaly, and that no decision in the reports rests on a wider or sounder basis than that in Waugh v. Carver. A merchant is asked to supply goods on credit to A., B., & Co. He does so, and, when he finds it necessary to sue for the price, his first inquiry is, whom shall he sue—to whom does the business belong? Not, probably, to those who appear most conspicuously in the conduct of it—the workmen, shopmen, clerks, foreman, manager. It belongs to those who take the benefit of it—the profits. It belongs to those who are the cause of the business being carried on; and the rule in Waugh v. Carver is simply a rule, and the only rational one, for ascertaining the principals or contracting parties to a given contract. Partnership is only one of the cases to which the rule applies, and the necessary propriety and justice of the rule may be seen more clearly by considering it apart from the complication of a partnership:—"If I buy goods in my own name, I must pay for them, and I cannot escape the liability by resolving in my own mind, or on paper, that I will not pay for them. If I employ an agent to buy the goods for me, I do substantially make the purchase myself, as much as if the agent had been my own breath or writing; and the creditor, on discovering the agency, may elect whether he will hold the agent to the letter of his engagement, or take his remedy against me. I cannot prevent this by stipulating with my agent, that I shall not be liable. I might as well stipulate to that effect with the next crossing sweeper. If I employ an agent to do my business, while I take the profits if it is profitable, and put him forward as the only person to bear the losses, it is plain that I am using him as a mask—that I am endeavouring to enjoy the advantages of trade, and to evade its duties, by resorting to a mere form; and it is reasonable, that the law should prevent this, by deciding according to the substance, and not according to the form^o."

The common law clearly cannot have any rule inconsistent with that in Waugh v. Carter; and from the endless variety and inconsistencies of the schemes which have been from time to time proposed for legalising a limit to the liability of traders, it may be inferred that there is no rational ground for any alteration of the law. Under the proposed bill, a business might be wholly controlled, and the profits of it wholly received, by persons from whom the creditors, in case of failure, would not be able to claim 100%. It is not expedient or just that the title to the profits of a business should be separated from the liability which it involves, or from the ownership and exercise of the abilities and industry employed in carrying it on. Interest and insurance are the proper and the only returns which a capitalist ought to ask for the use of his money. "Profits are the returns, beyond interest on capital and insurance, due to sagacity, skill, honesty, industry, and enterprise, or as they have been men briefly defined, the wages of superintendence. They who have capital, and do not possess or exercise the faculties necessary to turn it to account, have no claim to share in the reward of the exercise of those faculties by others. The idle capitalist should be content to circulate his capital through the channels of the public securities and mortgages. He cannot even discount, for that is a trade requiring skill and application, and a trade of which the utility cannot be too highly rated. Bankers, bill brokers, and others who carry on the trade of discount—middlemen, as they have been called (by way of reproach) between the cautious lender and the speculative borrower—form a class of men whose interest it is to know, and who have the opportunity of learning, the mercantile habits of their customers, that is to say, of all men in a large way of business. They enhance the value of good character, and render to credit such services as are rendered to municipal order by gas-light and the police. They also regulate the supply of money, and prevent those frequent and violent fluctuations which would occur if there were no such medium, endowed with foresight and stability, between the owners and the employers of capital. Now, so far as the commandite system would enable the capitalist, large or small, to ally himself directly and intimately with the employer of his capital, it would substitute for the intelligent caution of the discounting class, the ignorant recklessness of the investing class. It would thin the ranks and reduce the pay of the mercantile police, and in the same degree clear the field for improvidence and imposture. If the Legislature can properly interfere at all, it should do so to encourage the cultivation and exercise of mercantile talents, by preventing the idle capitalist from receiving any greater return than insurance and common interest. It is said by competent observers, that the prevalence of commandite partnerships on the Continent has the effect of confining to the class of gérants or clerks, men whose commercial abilities would, under a different system, insure their rise to independence^o." So far from making capital cheap, it makes it dear to those who have the ability to turn it to the best account.

The bill contains some provisions for the registration of partners, which are well meant, but are certainly not fit for use. Every principal or partner in a trading concern not carried on under a firm containing the surnames and Christian names in full of all the partners, without any other name, and without any general addition equivalent to "and company," is required to register an attested statement, signed by every partner resident in the United Kingdom, of the firm, place of business, nature of business, and names of the partners; and "upon any change taking place in the constitution of such firm, or in any of the said particulars of the said business, if the said firm shall be continued to be carried on," there must be a fresh registration, verified, if necessary, by statutory declaration. The penalty is—disability to sue on any contract made "under the name of a firm or style which by this act ought to have been registered." It may, perhaps, be intended that this disability is imposed only in respect of contracts made before due registration. One month is allowed for registration in the first instance; but there is no time of grace for registering alterations in the constitution of the firm.

This is not what is wanted. The scheme is not quite so impracticable as that of Lord Goderich's bill of 1858; but the greater part of the objection we made to that bill are applicable to the present one. It is practically impossible to enforce the registration of every partner, and something short of that must be accepted as sufficient. A merchant or tradesman dies. His business is carried on for the purpose of ultimately winding it up to advantage, or of transferring it to some member of the family, on the settlement of the residuary accounts. This may and often does, continue for many years. In the meantime the residuary legatees or next of kin enter the church, some execute marriage settlements, die, and transmit their shares in various ways. It is impossible to require or expect a prompt and regular, or indeed any, registration of such divisions and subdivisions of a partnership. Clergymen must not enter into trade. Mr. St. Chêne bequeaths a share of his residuary estate, of which the copyright in an infidel periodical forms part, to his nephew, who has been brought up to the church. What would be said of an entry of the Rev. Glastonbury Thorne, clerk, "partner to the extent of one-twenty-eighth share in the publication called 'The Reasoner?'" Again: must every author who shares profits with his publisher be made the subject of a distinct registration, in order to entitle the latter to sue his customers? Must all the trustees and all the creditors under a deed of assignment or inspection be registered? And if so, how is this to be done in cases of arrangements binding non-assenting creditors? We must be more moderate in our expectations. It is often difficult, almost impossible, to discover even a single defendant to sue: why should we not be allowed, on filing an affidavit that we cannot ascertain a principal, to bring an action against "the establishment," with service on the door-post, or on the man who takes down the shutters, and with the result, if we obtain judgment, of binding every person interested in the concern, and of having execution on the establishment? It is desirable to facilitate the discovery of secret partners, but, as we have said, any attempt to enforce the registration of all the persons interested in a business would be not only inexpedient, but futile. There might not, perhaps, be much objection to a provision enabling the plaintiff, either in the course of a suit or after judgment, to require each ostensible and each discovered secret partner to disclose, on oath, the names of all other persons interested in the profits. All this, however, would require enactments framed with great knowledge, caution, and skill.

* G. Sweet on the Limited Liability Act, 1855, p. 7.

Mr. Ryland can hardly be sincere in saying that the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, and other chambers, with whom the bill originated, are entitled to speak with some authority on partnership law. He must have been too often bored by the smart or dull (as the case may be) and idle persons who support and infest such associations to believe in their inspiration. He might as reasonably propose to regulate the practice of medicine by the opinion of a club of valetudinarians.

LORD ST. LEONARDS ON THE TITLE TO LAND REGISTRY ACT.

"I INQUIRED of a landowner who had sent in his claim in the second week of October, when his title was ready, how he got on; he told me, that three months afterwards his solicitor informed him that he was engaged in correspondence, &c., with other persons, to prove certain technical things, which, in the ordinary investigation of title would not be required, but he hoped in about a week to send in the evidence required, and a detailed description of the property in the required form. The next step would, he imagined, be the sending of an official surveyor to perambulate the property, and after that the advertisements, &c. This is not encouraging. Let us pause a moment over this case. The applicant is not far beyond the threshold of the court, for the advertisements are to come, and with them, perhaps, all the consequences which I have pointed out; and if no adverse claimant should appear, much still remains to be done and to be charged for, and the advertisements, ad valorem duty, besides other fees, have to be paid. The costs in this case, previously to the advertisements (and no case has yet arrived at such a state of maturity as to authorise the advertisements directed by the act), will amount to 130*l.*; and yet here was an estate, part of which had been purchased a few years ago, and the other part but a few months ago, and upon each purchase competent solicitors and counsel were employed, and the titles were thoroughly sifted; and in the result they were approved of by the registrar; but the repetition of the expense, and no doubt an increase of it, can readily be understood when additional abstracts were called for, and copies made of them and of the former abstracts, at an expense of upwards of 25*l.*; whilst the fee of the counsel appointed by the registrar, clerk's fee, and agent's charge of 13*s.* 4*d.*, exceeded 20*l.*; and the costs of examining the abstracts by the solicitor appointed by the registrar, and by the various solicitors attending with him, and of two other solicitors who produced some of the deeds, were not less than 27*l.* and the costs of a plan and survey—the latter by an officer named by the registrar—would be about an equal sum. The other charges were, of course, for letters, attendances, searches, perusals, and such other items as all solicitors' bills exhibit, and include a journey to town by the country solicitor, to confer with the registrar on the course of proceeding. This is one consequence of a metropolitan registry. If, in this particular case, all should run smooth, the owner will, probably, in about a twelvemonth from the time of entering his claim, at a considerable further outlay for advertisements, ad valorem and other dues and fees, solicitors charges, &c., obtain a declaration of title which, as I have shewn to you, will leave the estate in his hands just as liable to be impeached by an adverse claimant as it was before he availed himself of the powers of the act. The framers of the act could not desire to have a more favourable opportunity of testing its powers. An estate surrounded by no competitors, with a good title recently examined, vested in an owner in fee, free from incumbrances, is just the property which one should have supposed would pass through the court without impediment, and at a small expense. An extensive estate held under several titles, and frequently put in settlement, would, of course, greatly add to the expense and labour of registration.

"We have yet to consider the advertisements. When all which I have pointed out is done, and the description has been settled, and the registrar is satisfied with the title, and with the result of the inquiries made, he is to give notice, by public advertisement, of his intention to register such land with an indefeasible title, at the expiration of a period not less than three months from the date of such advertisement. Pray do not confound these three months with the three months already mentioned.

"Now, the notice is to contain a copy of the description of the land, and the names and descriptions of the applicants for registration—more charges for copies of description. And this direction is made more severe by General Orders, since issued, which require the notice to be advertised in the London Gazette, and in one London paper, and one local newspaper at least, and in more newspapers if the registrar shall so direct; and also in colonial and foreign newspapers, if the registrar shall think it necessary or desirable. Such advertisement shall be repeated as often as the registrar shall direct; and besides the particulars required by the act, the notice is to contain such other particulars as shall be deemed necessary. Notice of the intention to register is to be served on such of the tenants and occupiers of the land as the registrar shall direct. The cost of the mere advertisements would at once, in effect, cut off two or three acres of land of ordinary value. The act then requires what is very necessary, if you will ask for an indefeasible title, but still is somewhat alarming:—A copy of such notice is to be served on every adjoining occupier, and the person (if any) to whom he pays rent. Every adjoining occupier! Whom does the description embrace?"—Handy Book on Property Law, by Lord St. Leonards, 7th ed.

We have to announce the death of Digby Cayley Wrangham, Esq., Q. C., with a patent of precedence. The deceased gentleman was well known as a parliamentary counsel, in which branch of the profession his practice was very considerable. He was one of the counsel for the Earl of Cardigan, when tried before the House of Lords some years since.

Correspondence.

SHALL WE REGISTER TITLE?

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Mr. Tenison Edwards (ante, p. 81) first scolds me for not understanding that purchasers, mortgagees, &c. are not included or pointed at in the expression "he and be deemed to be &c.," and then admits that, if he were writing a strictly legal commentary, he should be of opinion that they do come within the words of the 20th section of the Transfer of Land Act!

"It is quite clear to me that 'G. L.' has not paid sufficient attention to the distinction between indefeasibility 'deemed' and the absolute indefeasibility of a purchaser, mortgagee, &c." Alas! it is not "G. L.," but the Legislature, that has not paid sufficient attention to the distinction. The proposition is, that the less includes the greater, not that the greater includes the less—that what is limited is absolute.

Mr. Edwards, whilst he admits many of my statements, does not, I venture to say, refute, at least by argument, a single one. He who talks of primary and secondary meanings of a section admits, I think, its obscurity. However, as Mr. Edwards does not profess to defend the verbal structure of the clauses of the Transfer of Land Act, may I not assume, notwithstanding his somewhat elaborate commentary on sect. 20, that he does not represent the verbal structure of this section, with its primary and secondary force, as perfect, or beyond the possibility of question? I think that "the unhappy landowner" alluded to in my letter "on the proposed bill" is safe, at all events, for the present.

I may add, that I cannot believe, if I have adopted the convenient statute-book heading, "Transfer of Land" Act, in order to save space in your columns, that your readers required Mr. Edwards's somewhat ostentatious reference by way of identification.

Your obedient servant,

Rolls-chambers, Chancery-lane,

G. L.

BILL IN PROGRESS.

(Prepared and brought in by Mr. Adderley, Sir Stafford Northcote, and Mr. Garrett.)

A Bill for the further Security of the Persons of her Majesty's Subjects from personal Violence.

Whereas by the 43rd section of the act of the session of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, it is provided, that "whoever shall, being armed with any offensive weapon or instrument, rob, or assault with intent to rob, any person, or shall together with one or more other person or persons rob, or assault with intent to rob, any person, or shall rob any person, and at the time of, or immediately before or immediately after, such robbery shall wound, beat, strike, or use any other personal violence to any person, shall be guilty of felony, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for life, or for any term not less than three years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement:" and whereas the punishment awarded by the said section is insufficient to deter robbers from using violence in the commission of their crimes: be it enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. Where any person is convicted of a crime under the said section, the court before whom he is convicted may, in addition to, or in substitution for, the punishment awarded by the said section, or any part thereof, direct that the offender, if a male, be once, twice, or thrice publicly or privately whipped, subject to the following provisions:—

- (1). That in the case of an offender whose age does not exceed sixteen years, the number of strokes do not exceed twenty-five, and the instrument used shall be a birch rod:
- (2). That in the case of any other male offender, the conviction shall specify the number of strokes to be inflicted, such number not in any case to exceed fifty.

CHANGE OF NAME.—In the debate in the House of Commons on Wednesday, on Mr. Roebuck's motion, the Solicitor-General said the discussion was very interesting, but not of very great importance to the country at large. But, at the risk of appearing to his hon. and learned friend to err in his law, he must say that to the best of his belief there was no positive law on this subject. The fact was, that surnames grew up mostly as nicknames, of which the hon. and learned member had given an amusing example. That very origin shewed that there was no positive law on the subject. It was a matter of usage and reputation from the beginning; the name clung to a man, and the law permitted him to shuffle it off if he could. There was no law forbidding a man to change his name, but there was also no law which compelled his neighbour to acknowledge him under the name he might assume. It reminded him of the saying of Owen Glendower,

"I can call spirits from the vasty deep."

Hotspur rejoined—

"Why so can I, or so can any man;

"But will they come when you do call for them?"

It was exactly the same with these names. Everybody was at liberty, if he pleased, to change his surname, but no one else was obliged to recognise the change unless he pleased. When, however, by usage, a man had acquired a name by reputation, then persons in public authority were obliged to acknowledge the new surname. His hon. and learned friend had spoken as if the courts of law were obliged to comply with the request of an attorney who might wish to change his name. In the case mentioned by his hon. and learned friend, the Court seeing nothing to the contrary, and being told by the attorney that he intended to use his new surname in future, thought it right—as it was a case in which a man would probably put his name on a brass-plate on his door, and be invariably known by his new name—to grant the application; but in granting the very last application of this kind, Lord Chief Justice Cockburn expressly guarded himself against laying down the rule, that a man had a legal right to call upon the Court to alter his name on the rolls. He said the Court did it for convenience. There was no law on the subject, but when there appeared to be nothing arbitrary or improper, and when there was no encroachment on the feelings and rights of others, then it was courteous to accede to the wish of a person who might desire to change his name. There was, however, no principle of law that any person occupying an official position was bound to recognise a capricious or arbitrary assumption of names by persons who had no right to them, either by descent or by the inheritance of property.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, this Company now offers to new Insurers EIGHTY PER CENT. of the Profits, at Quinquennial Divisions, or a low Rate of Premium without participation of Profits.

Since the establishment of the Company in 1821, the amount of Profits allotted to the Assured has exceeded in Cash value 660,000l., which represents equivalent Reversionary Bonuses of 1,058,000l.
After the Division of Profits at Christmas, 1859, the Life Assurances in force, with existing Bonuses thereon, amounted to upwards of 4,730,000l., the Income from the Life Branch 207,000l. per annum, and the Life Assurance Fund, independent of the Capital, exceeded 1,618,000l.

LOCAL MILITIA and VOLUNTEER CORPS.—No extra premium is required for service therein.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, if such value be not less than 50l.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 28, 1863.

SIR JOHN TRELAWNY'S bill for allowing simple affirmation instead of oath in certain cases has been rejected on the second reading, by a majority of 142 to 96. It was supported by Sir John Trelawny, Mr. Roebuck, Sir F. Goldsmid, Mr. Locke, Mr. Ingham, Mr. Coningham, and Sir C. Douglas; and opposed by the Attorney-General, Sir J. Ferguson, and Mr. Henley. Mr. Knightley also spoke, but his observations appear to have been inaudible. The absence of more names of practising lawyers from the debate may perhaps be explained by the circumstance of the bill having been proceeded with during the circuits.

This is the third bill of this kind that has been rejected, and we wish some other member would take up the important question which it involves, in order to its being definitively settled, by removing what we cannot help thinking a defect in our procedure, and at the same time avoiding the indecorous and dangerous remedy prescribed by the bills of Sir J. Trelawny.

The object of the bill, as our readers doubtless are aware, was to meet the case of infidels called to serve on juries, or to give evidence as witnesses in courts of justice, all of whom are by the existing law excluded from so doing; and also that of children too young to be sworn. By the term "infidels" here is meant not merely persons of heterodox views on religion, or even out of the pale of the Christian faith, but persons who do not recognise the existence of a Supreme Being, the rewarder of truth and avenger of falsehood among men. And before proceeding farther we must take notice of the following topic urged by Sir C. Douglas, in support of the bill:—"In a recent case a witness, who said he was a member of the Affirmation Society, and a member of Holyoake's party, requested to be allowed to make an affirmation, instead of taking the oath. The judge asked him what motive he had to speak the truth, to which he replied, 'Honour.' 'Do you believe,' continued the judge, 'that by not speaking the truth you will incur punishment in a future state?' 'No,' returned the witness, 'I believe we shall be punished here.' Upon this the judge declined to take his evidence. Surely that was not a case in which the present law promoted truth and justice." Assuredly not; but we deny the judge's law. There is no other decision, of which we are aware, that a belief in a future state of punishment is required; and the same erroneous view of the actual state of the law on this subject, runs through the speeches of Sir J. Trelawny and Mr. Roebuck.

We have frequently declared our conviction, that the testimony of infidels ought to be received in courts of justice (8 Jur., N. S., part 2, p. 399), and so far agree with Sir J. Trelawny and his friends; but we wholly dissent from them when they say, that the fact of a man being an infidel, in the sense above described, is not an objection to his credit, to be weighed by the jury; and still more energetically do we protest against their view, that the evidence of infidels should be allowed on the principle that oaths are useless or mischievous. On the contrary, we consider infidelity a very serious objection to a man's credit; for although some infidels may be so from conscience and conviction, the great majority are infidels from motives of a very different kind. It is a favourite decantatum with many that oaths are useless because good men do not need them and bad men disregard them—an argument based on the false assumption, that the conduct of each individual man is uniformly either good or bad; and is well answered by Archbishop Secker thus:—"It must be owned, great numbers will certainly speak truth without an oath; and too many will not speak it with one. But the generality of mankind are of a middle sort; neither so virtuous as to be safely trusted, in cases of importance, on their bare word; nor yet so abandoned as to violate a more solemn engagement. Accordingly we find by experience, that many will boldly say, what they will by no means adventure to swear; and the difference which they make between these two things is often, indeed, much greater than they should; but still it shews the need of insisting on the strongest security. When once men are under that awful tie, and, as the Scripture phrase is, have bound their souls with a bond (Numb. xxx, 2), it composes their passions, counterbalances their prejudices and interests, makes them mindful of what they promise, and careful what they assert; puts them upon exactness in every circumstance; and circumstances are often very material things. Even the good might be too negligent, and the bad would frequently have no concern at all, about their words, if it were not for the solemnity of this religious act. And a further advantage of it is, that when we have thus had the strongest assurance given us, which we can have, concerning any matter, we are naturally disposed to acquiesce in it; and an oath for confirmation becomes the end of all strife (Heb. vi, 16)."

Mr. Roebuck made a speech in support of the bill, for some parts of which its other supporters have small reason to thank him. He said, "He knew that in the world's opinion the state of mind called 'unbelief' was a crime, or stain at least; but the world did not generally seem to recollect that belief and unbelief were not acts of volition. It was known that children had no idea of death; and, in the next place, the notion of a little girl of seven or eight years of age having in her mind anything like a conception of a future state of reward and punishment, was so ridiculous that no man could possibly believe it. On this point various opinions had been held in all ages among different communities. He believed that it was generally known that in the Pentateuch there was no statement with respect to a future state of reward and punishment, and the oath taken by the Jews had nothing to do with the vengeance of God after death, they believing that a special vengeance would fall on the perjurer during life. Intelligent Christians did not believe in special interpositions of Providence, but were of opinion that the world was governed by general laws, which might probably bring upon them evil consequences in this life on account of taking a false oath, and they also believed that a false oath would be followed by punishment hereafter." Into these very questionable metaphysical and theological speculations we, following the example of the House, decline to follow Mr. Roebuck; who then proceeded thus:—"He lately read a book, in which it was related that Dr. Pusey, who had impressed upon his followers the impropriety of telling an untruth, especially in the confessional, met one day in the streets of Oxford, a man, who said, 'I have been burning in hell for one hour, because I told you a lie in the confessional.' The man suddenly disappeared, but Dr. Pusey called at his house, and found he had been dead an hour. That was an illustration of the idea entertained of the consequences of taking a false oath." Whether this anecdote is true or false appears quite immaterial; but, supposing it ever so authentic, it only adds an illustration to many others that might be given, of the effect of priestcraft acting on a weak mind, or disordered imagination.

Mr. Roebuck used, however, the following argument:—"The course of proceeding pursued at present sometimes excluded good evidence and took the bad. A witness got into the witness-box, and, being examined on what was called the voire dire, was asked whether he believed in a God, and in a future state of reward and punishment, and on replying in the negative, he must go down. Now, that man had told the truth. Another witness of precisely the same opinions declared, on being similarly questioned, that he was a believer, and the consequence was, that the truth-telling witness was shut out and the false one accepted." This, Mr. Roebuck observed, was an argument that he had never heard answered. Well, we will try our hand. It is true that the course of proceeding pursued at present sometimes excludes good evidence, and takes the bad; but so would any possible course of proceeding that the wit of man could devise. If all, or the majority of society, were in the position here described by Mr. Roebuck, namely, infidels alike, but some honest and others dishonest, his argument might be unanswerable; but the whole class of infidels, honest and dishonest, happily forms an inconsiderable minority in the community, and laws made for the convenience of that minority, violate the maxim, "ad ea quæ frequentius accidunt jura adaptantur," and do not fulfil the conditions of every good law, that it be "pro communi civium utilitate conscripta."

We hope we have heard the last of Sir John Trevelyan's affirmation projects.

Correspondence.

LEGALITY OF SECURITY FOR COMPOUND INTEREST.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The Master of the Rolls, in his judgment in the case of Crosskill v. Bower—Bower v. Turner, reported in your number of this date (9 Jur., N. S., part 1, col. 1, p. 269), appears to take it for granted, that compound interest may be legally reserved in a deed or other agreement. Can you inform me whether this point has been judicially determined?

Your obedient,
W. S.

March 21, 1863.

[There can be no doubt that the repeal of the money laws has removed the objection to which a contract for compound interest in a mortgage were formerly subject—namely, that it not actually usury, it "tended to usury" (9 Ves. 271); and now since a mortgage to secure interest at 10l. or 20l. per cent. is lawful, it would, at least in ordinary cases, be absurd to censure, in a court of equity, a security for compound interest, as a hard or oppressive bargain. Provisions for compound interest are of frequent occurrence in mortgages.]

The Right Hon. Sir William Erle, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, has appointed William Gorham, Gent., of Tonbridge, Kent, to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Kent.

METROPOLITAN POLICE COURTS.—Mr. Selfe, senior magistrate of the Thames Police Court, has been appointed to the Westminster Police Court, in place of Mr. Paynter, resigned. Mr. Partridge, stipendiary magistrate at Wolverhampton, succeeds Mr. Selfe at the Thames Police Court, and Mr. I. Spooner, of the Midland Circuit, takes Mr. Partridge's place at Wolverhampton.

ALTERATION OF FEES DIRECTED TO BE TAKEN IN THE PRINCIPAL REGISTRY OF THE COURT OF PROBATE.

On the 1st day of April, 1863, the table of fees to be taken in the principal registry of her Majesty's Court of Probate in non-contentious business, and published in The London Gazette of the 15th day of August, 1862 (see 8 Jur., N. S., part 2, pp. 391 to 402), shall be altered, by erasing so much of the same as directs that—

For every copy of a will made for the Inland Revenue Office the sum of 6d. per folio of ninety words shall be taken: and that

For every abstract of an administration act for the Inland Revenue Office the sum of 3s. 3d. shall be taken.

And from that day no payment shall be received from the Inland Revenue Office for such copies and abstracts.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday, March 24.

ABOLITION OF TURNPIKES.

In reply to Mr. Western,

Mr. H. A. Bruce said it was not the intention of the Government to introduce any general measure for the abolition of turnpikes during the present session.

CESSION OF TERRITORY.

Mr. Griffith asked the Solicitor-General whether it was within the competence of the prerogative of the Crown, upon the advice of the Minister of the day, to alienate any undoubted territorial possession of the Crown or the country without the knowledge or consent of Parliament; and if so, whether such exercise of the prerogative was not, in fact, equivalent to the possession by the Government of an arbitrary power of such alienation of territory.

The Solicitor-General said, the question was, in substance, the same as that which the hon. member had already addressed to the noble lord at the head of the Government. If the noble lord had not answered the question, he should have doubted whether it was consistent with his duty to make any reply to it. As it was, he could only repeat what the noble lord had stated, that there was neither law nor constitutional usage to render the assent of Parliament necessary for the cession of territories of the Crown, unless the laws of this country had been introduced into those territories, or unless Parliament had legislated concerning them.

Mr. Griffith wished to know exactly what the hon. and learned gentleman meant. Was it to be understood that the Government could, by its own prerogative, cede such a territory as Gibraltar, or any other colony or dependency?

The Solicitor-General said, he really could not argue the question with the hon. member. What he meant was simply this—if British subjects settled in a newly-discovered territory, then they carried the laws of this country with them; and in that case a cession could not take place without the knowledge and consent of Parliament. In the case, however, of a ceded or conquered territory, the consent of Parliament would not be necessary to a cession, unless Parliament had already legislated in regard to it.

PARTNERSHIP-LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

Mr. Scholefield moved the second reading of this bill, a summary of which will be found in another part of our impression (p. 117), declaring, however, his willingness to refer it to a select committee.

The bill was opposed by Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Gregson, Mr. T. Baring, Mr. Bazley, Sir H. Cairns, Mr. Whiteside, Mr. Jackson, and Alderman Sidney; and supported by Mr. Milner Gibson, Mr. Malins, and Mr. Seely.

The Solicitor-General, on the part of the Government, declared that it seemed to them right to assent to the second reading of the bill, while they hoped that it would be greatly improved in committee, and while they by no means bound themselves to support its passing into law in its present shape.

On a division, the second reading was carried by a majority of 56 against 39.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.—A meeting of this society took place at its rooms, 3, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, on Monday, the 2nd March, the Right Hon. T. Headlam, Q. C., M.P., in the chair. Mr. Trower moved the following resolutions:—"1. That it is highly expedient that the reported decisions of our superior courts of law in England and Ireland, from the earliest to the present time, should be forthwith expurgated and consolidated, and their undue accumulation for the future be, if possible, prevented. 2. That to this end a royal commission should issue to inquire and report what are the best means of effecting such expurgation and consolidation, and of preventing such an accumulation, and generally of improving the present system of law reporting. 3. That a deputation of this society do forthwith wait on the Lord Chancellor, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the Home Secretary, to lay the views of this society before them, and urge upon them the immediate adoption of these resolutions." Mr. Geale seconded the motion. After some remarks by Mr. Pulling, Mr. Edgar, Mr. T. Webster, Mr. Palmer, and Mr. McQueen, Q. C., the following amendment, proposed by Mr. T. Webster, and seconded by Mr. L. Pulling, was carried:—"That the meeting, approving of the principle of the resolutions moved by Mr. Trower, refer the same to a committee to report to the next meeting as to the best mode of proceeding thereon, and in reference thereto."

CORRIGENDUM.—In our notice of the decease of Mr. Sergeant Wrangham, ante p. 107, the learned gentleman is, by an error of the press, described as "Q. C." instead of "Q. S."

BOOTH, WILLIAM, Walter's-buildings, Kent-road, Surrey, and Gwynes-place, Hackney-road, auctioneer, April 13. Off. Ass. Edwards; Sol. Aldridge, 46, Moorgate-street.—Adj. March 20.

THE LAW of EVIDENCE as ADMINISTERED in ENGLAND and APPLIED to INDIA. By JOSEPH GOODEVE, Esq., of the Inner Temple and Lincoln's-inn, Barrister, Master of the Supreme Court of Calcutta, Member of the Senate of the University of Calcutta, and Lecturer on Law and Equity in the Presidency College.

"Mr. Goodeve's book is professedly and really a Treatise on the English Law of Evidence, shewing in addition the adaptation of that law to oriental exigencies. It abounds in shrewd remarks, and is evidently the result of comprehensive study, close observation, and clear reasoning. In India, the insertion of numerous references would have been rather an incumbrance than a benefit; and while we can confidently recommend the work to the young student of principles at home, we have little doubt that it will become a leading book of practice in the country for which it is especially intended."—Solicitors' Journal, July 5, 1862.

PETTY SESSIONS PRACTICE.

Now ready, in thick 12mo., price 18s. cloth, lettered,

STONE'S PRACTICE of PETTY SESSIONS. With the Statutes, a List of Summary Convictions, and an Appendix of Forms. Seventh Edition. By THOMAS BELL and LEWIS W. CAVE, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. With a Supplement, bringing the Statutes and Cases up to 1863. 12mo., price 18s. cloth.

"It is remarkable for a rare combination of conciseness and clearness in the composition, which have recommended it to magistrates who have not been educated as lawyers, and to whom, therefore, the books written for the use of lawyers are often obscure by reason of their technicalities. The present editors have preserved this characteristic of Mr. Stone's volume in their own abundant additions to it."—Law Times.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, APRIL 4, 1863.

THE success of the Confederate ship of war Alabama, in capturing and destroying the vessels of the Federal States, has given rise to a most interesting debate in the House of Commons, in which Sir Roundell Palmer, the present Solicitor-General, greatly distinguished himself, not only by his clear exposition of international and statute law, applicable to the subject of the debate, but also by the spirited and decisive manner in which he exposed the misrepresentations of the Federal Government and press, and of their unscrupulous supporters in this country.

The case of The Alabama may be shortly stated. She was built, or in the course of building, by a Liverpool firm, when, in consequence of the representations made by the American minister in this country (Mr. Adams) on the 23rd June last, suggesting that she was intended for the Confederate navy, the Government of this country directed the Commissioners of Customs to make inquiries respecting the ship. On the 1st July they made a report to Earl Russell: they said it was evident the ship was a ship of war; it was believed she was built for a foreign Government, but the builders would give no information about her destination; and the commissioners had no other reliable source of information on that point.

The English Government, being without evidence of her destination, of course declined to seize the ship; but Earl Russell on the 4th July communicated to Mr. Adams the result of the inquiry, intimating that if he could furnish further evidence it should receive attention. Fourteen days passed away before Mr. Adams furnished any evidence whatsoever; and the complete evidence was not in the hands of Earl Russell till the 26th July, which was on a Saturday. On the 28th the law officers of the Crown were consulted. On the 29th (the next day) their opinion being obtained, a telegraphic message was sent down to stop the ship, but she had, before the message arrived, by an ingenious stratagem, escaped from the English port, unarm'd, and without military stores.

The American Government and people, doubtless much irritated by the dashing exploits of The Alabama, in her character of a ship of war belonging to the Confederate States, have made the most unfounded charges against the Government of this country; and, in doing so, they have not scrupled entirely to disregard and pervert the principles of international and municipal law, not only as it is recognised in this country, but as it has often been laid down and enforced by the most eminent jurists in their own country.

Nothing can be more utterly without foundation than the complaint of the Federals, that there is any international ground of complaint, merely because a ship of war, with which the Confederate States may carry on belligerent operations, comes from private individuals in this country. Thus, it is laid down by Vattel, book 3, c. 7, "that if a nation trades in arms, timber, ships, military stores, &c., I cannot take it amiss that it sells such things to my enemy, provided it does not refuse to sell them to me also. It carries on its trade without any design of injuring me, and, in continuing it the same as if I was not engaged in war, that nation gives me no just cause of complaint."

The reports of the American courts, like our own, abound with decisions, in which the law is laid down in similar terms. Thus, in the case of The Independencia, Mr. Justice Story says, "There is nothing in our laws, or in the law of nations, that forbids our citizens from sending armed vessels, as well as munitions of war, to foreign nations for sale. It is a commercial adventure, which no nation is bound to prohibit, and which only exposes the persons engaged in it to the penalty of confiscation."

In accordance with the rules of international law thus laid down, both the belligerents, the Federals and Confederates, have been supplied by England with various munitions of war, such as cannon, rifles, muskets, percussion caps, and gunpowder—the Federals to a very large amount—and no party has pretended that England, by permitting such exports, has been guilty of any breach of international law; the exporters, however, carry on such a trade at their only risk, such articles, when exported to one belligerent, being, if seized by the other, liable to confiscation as contraband of war.

Now, the sale of ships of war to a belligerent, according to the principles of international law, is no more unlawful than the sale of other munitions of war. This country, however, has, for its own purposes, passed the Foreign Enlistment Act, the object of which was "for defence of our neutrality, against any invasion of it by other powers, and not in consequence of any obligation imposed upon us." Foreign nations, therefore, in such cases as that of The Alabama, have no right to appeal to the principles of international law to prevent such vessels being supplied to the enemy, but they can only appeal, as the Solicitor-General well observes, "to the friendly spirit of the neutral to enforce its own statute, according to its own principles of judicial administration. . . . A clear ground of complaint would exist if our Government themselves, directly or indirectly, were concerned in fitting out such a belligerent ship; but if it is merely the case of individuals doing that which would be lawful by international law in this country, if it were not for our Foreign Enlistment Act—doing that which is only unlawful because there is a Foreign Enlistment Act—then the whole extent of the right possessed by the United States is, to ask us to administer our laws upon the same principles, and in the same manner, as we should administer them against our own subjects, in a matter in which we were ourselves alone concerned."

Tested by these principles, the conduct of our own Government has, with regard to The Alabama, been altogether right and straightforward, both as respects our own countrymen and the people of the United or Federal States. The Government refused to seize The Alabama under the Foreign Enlistment Act until the American minister, after great and apparently unnecessary delay, had supplied them with proper evidence of the destination and purpose of that vessel. There was no delay on the part of the English Government to enforce the law, although, by circumstances over which they had no control, it happened to be defeated.

The American Government, and their advocates and supporters in the House of Commons, think that our Government should have acted with more promptitude; but how they could have done so, unless they had acted in the absence of evidence, and therefore illegally, it is difficult to conceive.

It is true, that as the Federalists have submitted to a mere despotism in their own country, it may appear to them, in their present state of mind, not unreasonable that the Government of a free and friendly State should be called upon at their instance, and for their benefit, to violate those fundamental laws which in England are considered to be essential to the enjoyment of civil liberty. We trust, however, the people of the United States will now understand that the Foreign Enlistment Act will only be enforced "in the way in which English laws are usually enforced against English subjects—on evidence, and not on suspicion; on facts, and not on presumption; on conclusive testimony, and not on the mere accusations of a foreign minister or his agents."

REGISTRATION OF DEEDS OF ARRANGEMENT WITH CREDITORS.

IN the case of Hodgson v. Wightman (9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 308) the Court of Exchequer assumed that the 194th section of the Bankruptcy Act applies only to deeds of arrangement between a debtor and all his creditors; but applied the enactment, so construed, to a deed in terms limited to the executing creditors, upon reasoning which is not easy to be understood. The deed in question was an indenture between G. W. of the one part, and the several persons whose hands and seals were thereunto subscribed and set, being creditors of the said G. W., or agents or solicitors of creditors, of the other part. It recited that G. W. had contracted certain debts with the parties of the second part, which debts were set opposite to their respective names, and that the parties of the second part, being or representing at least three-fourths in value of the creditors of the said G. W., had agreed to accept 6s. in the pound in full satisfaction of their debts; and the deed then witnessed, that in consideration of 6s. paid by G. W. for every pound due by him to them, the said parties of the second part, being or representing at least three-fourths in value of the creditors of the said G. W., did release him from all liabilities with regard to the said debts; and the said G. W. contracted with the parties of the second part that he would pay to them, and each of them, the said sum of 6s. for every pound due by him to them as aforesaid, by two instalments, as therein mentioned; and the parties thereto did thereby accept the said sum of 6s. in the pound in discharge of their respective debts and claims. The deed was not registered under the 164th clause of the Bankruptcy Act. One of the executing creditors sued G. W. for the full amount of his debt; and the Court held that the deed, not having been registered, could not be used in support of a plea of release. Wilde, B., in delivering the judgment of the Court, said, "We construe sect. 194 of the new Bankruptcy Act to apply to all deeds whatever which are, or profess to be, or are obviously on the face of them intended to be, deeds of arrangement between the debtor and the whole body of his creditors. It was clearly, in our opinion, intended to include, not only deeds complying with, and framed under, the provisions of sect. 192, but all other deeds whereby a man may compound or arrange with the whole body of his creditors. We cannot read the se-verbal sections of the act relating to deeds of arrangement, and avoid the conclusion, that the scope of the act was to subject all such arrangements to the operation, to some extent at least, of the bankruptcy laws, leaving it, however, open to the parties, by express provision in the deed, to qualify and restrain the application of such laws. Now, what is the deed in question? It is a deed professing, on the face of it, to be entered into between the debtor of the one part, and the creditors signing of the other part; and, in the operative part of the deed, the said creditors, parties of the second part, are expressly said 'to be or represent at the least three-fourths in value of the creditors of the said G. W.' It is impossible to refer these words to any other intention than that of making the deed one of arrangement which should bind the whole of the defendant's creditors under the powers of sect. 192. If it were really intended to be only an arrangement with certain creditors who should sign the deed, what sense, or reasonable meaning or purpose, could the words I have quoted have borne? The conclusion as to the intention of the parties seems inevitable, and, as a deed intended to be executed [by] or binding on the whole body, it required registration."

* The Solicitor-General's speech, Times, March 28, 1863.

The 194th section, however, does not say anything about intention; it only speaks of a deed, instrument, or agreement, whereby a debtor conveys, or agrees to convey, his estate and effects, or the principal part thereof, for the benefit of his creditors [i. e. of all his creditors], or makes any arrangement with his creditors [i. e. all his creditors], or any person on their behalf. From the words referred to by the learned judge, it might be guessed that the draftsman wished to frame a deed binding on all the creditors; but it is perfectly clear that he failed to do so, and that the deed, as framed, could only bind those who actually executed it, and it might just as well have been guessed, from the omission to register it, that whatever the draftsman contemplated, the debtor, at least, did not intend to bind non-executing creditors. It is surely a very strained application of an absurd enactment to make it govern a deed which confessedly is incapable of operating in the manner described in the enactment, merely because it is conjectured that such an operation was intended or desired.

The case, however, as far as it goes, is welcome as an authority in favour of the construction that limits the scope of the 194th section to deeds between a debtor and all his creditors. Deeds of arrangement, not intended to bind non-executing creditors under the 192nd section, and, of course, not intended to be registered, will, therefore, contain a declaration expressly limiting their operation to the creditors who actually execute them. PROSPECTUS OF THE LECTURES

To be delivered during the ensuing Trinity Educational Term, by the several Readers appointed by the Inns of Court.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND LEGAL HISTORY.

The Reader will trace the History of our Constitution from the reign of Richard II to the latest period which the time allotted to the Course will enable him to reach. He will dwell particularly on the Judicial and Legal History of the different ages which he describes, as recorded in the Statute-books, the volumes of Reports, and the State Trials.

In his Private Classes he will begin with the reign of Charles I, and proceed in regular order to that of his successors.

The books to which he will chiefly refer are—Blackstone's Commentaries, by Kerr—Matthew Paris—Rapin's History of the Period—Thierry, Conquêtes des Normans—Thierry, Histoire du Tiers État—Bracton—Selden's Notes on Fleta—Statute-book of the Period—Reeves' History of the English Law—Parliamentary History—Lord Clarendon's History—May's History—Rushworth's Collections—Brodie's History—Hallam's Constitutional History and Chapter in the Middle Ages—Hayes' History of Conveyancing—Burnet's Memoirs—State Trials—Starkie's Law of Libel.

EQUITY.

The Reader on Equity proposes to deliver, during the ensuing Educational Term, a course of Ten Lectures on the following subjects:—

1. The Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery in Matters of Account.
2. On Equitable Set-off and the Appropriation of Payments.
3. The Law of Partnership as modified by Courts of Equity.
4. On the Relief afforded in Cases of Mistake.
5. On the Doctrine of Implied Performance and Satisfaction.

The Reader will continue with his Senior and Junior Classes the General Courses of Equity already commenced. He will also continue in both Classes to explain the leading Rules of Pleading in Equity, from the work of Lord Redesdale.

THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY.

The Reader on the Real Property Law, &c. proposes to deliver, in the ensuing Educational Term, a course of Ten Lectures on the following subjects:—

1. The Law of Life Assurance.
2. The Law of Domicile.
3. The Power of Executors to sell Real Estate under a Testamentary Charge of Debts.
4. Trusts and Powers of Sale of Real Estate.

The Reader on the Law of Real Property will, in his Private Classes, refer from time to time more particularly to the Cases cited in his Public Lectures. He will also continue his Course of Real Property Law, using the work of Mr. Joshua Williams as a textbook.

JURISPRUDENCE AND THE CIVIL LAW.

The Reader on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law proposes, in the ensuing Educational Term, to deliver Ten Public Lectures, in continuation of a Course upon—

The Comparative Jurisprudence of Rome, France, and England with respect to Obligations arising from Contract.

In this Course the Reader proposes to consider—

1. The Contract of Sale.
2. The Contract of Letting to Hire.
3. The Contract of Partnership.
4. The Contract of Mandatum.
5. The Real Contracts.
6. The Verbal Contracts.
7. The Literal Contracts.

In his Private Class the Reader will consider in detail the Subjects of the Public Lectures. The Systema Juris Romani of Mackelvey will be used as the Text-book for Roman Law, and the Code Civil as its best modern development. The Reader will refer to the Digest, and the Commentaries of Troplong and Morcadé, upon the Code Civil.

COMMON LAW.

The Reader on Common Law proposes to deliver, during the ensuing Educational Term, Ten Public Lectures on the Law of Torts and on Criminal Law, as under.

The Reader will consider—

1. The Nature of a Right of Action ex Delicto, and the Ingredients therein.

2. Wherein Tort differs from Contract and from Crime.
3. Actions ex Delicto.
4. The Leading Principles of our Criminal Law.
5. Criminal Procedure.
6. Indictable Offences.

With his Private Class the Reader will pursue the inquiry above indicated, directing attention especially to the alterations effected in our Criminal Law by the Consolidation and Amendment Acts. He will use as Text-books and for reference, the under-mentioned works:—Smith's Leading Cases (5th ed.); Broom's Commentaries (2nd ed.); Archbold's Criminal Pleading, by Welsby; and Mr. Greaves's edition of the Criminal Law Acts.

By order of the Council,

Council Chamber, Lincoln's Inn,
March 26, 1862.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday, March 25.

On the motion of Mr. Scholefield, the Partnership-law Amendment Bill was referred to a select committee.

Friday, March 27.

Mr. A. Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it was the intention of her Majesty's Government to introduce, during the present session, a measure for enabling the Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings to acquire a site for the erection and concentration of courts of justice.

Sir G. Grey said it was not the intention of the Government to introduce any bill for the purpose. The subject of the erection of new courts of justice was under the consideration of the Government, and at a later period he would probably be able to give a more definite answer to the hon. member's question.

THE object of "THE READER" is to supply the long-felt want of a First-class Literary Newspaper, equal in literary merit and general ability to the political press of London.

Without any wish to depreciate the merits of other journals which have attempted a somewhat similar object, the Proprietors of "THE READER" considered that this object had not yet been attained; and the success of "THE READER" proves that in this opinion they were not singular. "THE READER" commands the services of distinguished writers in every branch of Literature and Science, so that each subject is, as far as possible, treated by critics whose names cannot fail to carry weight on the special topic of which they write. The desire of the Proprietors is to have every work of note reviewed simply and solely on its own merits. Totally unconnected with any publishing firm, "THE READER" will shew equal favour to all works of sterling worth, without caring through what channel they come before the public, and thus be a trustworthy guide for the book-seeking public.

In the arrangements of "THE READER," the following system has been adopted:—Each number contains a full and detailed list of all books and pamphlets published during the week, specifying their prices, size, number of pages, maps, &c., and, wherever it is desirable, each publication is accompanied by a short descriptive notice. All works deserving further consideration are reviewed at length within a week or two of publication. The especial attention devoted by "THE READER" to Foreign Literature enables its readers to keep themselves acquainted with every work of interest published on the Continent or in America.

Copious and accurate Reports are furnished of all Scientific Discoveries, presented in such a form as to render them interesting and intelligible to the general public.

Topics of Musical, Artistic, or Dramatic interest are discussed in "THE READER" in separate and original articles, which, it is hoped, are found to be not only valuable, but interesting, as pieces of criticism, even by those persons unacquainted with the special subject.

Correspondence on all Literary and Scientific topics, from writers of note, finds a place in "THE READER."

"THE READER" is likewise issued in MONTHLY PARTS, three of which are published—that for January at 1s. 9d., and those for February and March, each at 1s. 6d.

"It is remarkable for a rare combination of conciseness and clearness in the composition, which have recommended it to magistrates who have not been educated as lawyers, and to whom, therefore, the books written for the use of lawyers are often obscure by reason of their technicalities. The present editors have preserved this characteristic of Mr. Stone's volume in their own abundant additions to it."—Law Times.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, APRIL 11, 1863.

EARLY in the present session of Parliament, Mr. Bouverie brought into the House of Commons, a Bill to prohibit the Issue of Writs for Actions of Debt in the Superior Courts for Sums not exceeding Twenty Pounds. This bill he has since withdrawn, and substituted another for it; and, as the subject is well deserving the attention of the Profession, we proceed to state the provisions of this latter bill, and shew its points of difference from the former.

The bill, after reciting that "It is desirable to protect debtors from being sued in the superior courts of common law for sums not exceeding 20*l*," enacts in its 1st section, which is substantially the same in both bills, that "It shall not be lawful for any person to take out a writ of summons in an action for the recovery of a debt in the superior courts of common law, where the debt claimed shall not exceed 20*l*, unless by the leave of one of the judges of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster, upon such terms as to payment of costs, giving security for costs, or otherwise, as the judge shall think fit, nor in the Court of Common Pleas of Lancaster and Durham."

The 2nd section, which, with the exception of the words which we have marked with italics, is the same in both bills, enacts, that, "In all cases where the plaintiff dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant, or where the cause of action did not arise wholly or in some material point within the jurisdiction of the court within which the defendant dwells or carries on his business at the time of the action brought, such plaintiff may, if he does not claim a sum exceeding 50*l*., bring his action in the county court within the jurisdiction of which he either dwells or carries on business, upon giving security to the registrar of the said county court, either with or without sureties, as to the registrar may seem requisite, for the costs of the defendant, not exceeding in the whole the sum of 10*l*."

The remaining clause of the present bill is entirely new, and is as follows:—"In any action in a county court for a debt or a liquidated money demand not less than 40*s*. the plaintiff may, at his option, cause to be issued a summons in the ordinary form or in the form contained in the Schedule (B.), and numbered one, to the act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, and if such last-mentioned summons be issued it shall be personally served on the defendant twelve clear days at the least before the return day thereof, and then, if the defendant shall not, at least six clear days before such return day, give notice in writing signed by himself, his attorney or agent, to the registrar of the court from which the summons issued, of his intention to defend, the plaintiff may, in or within one month after such return day, without giving any proof of his claim, have judgment entered up against the defendant for the amount of his claim and costs, such costs to be taxed by the registrar; and the order upon such judgment shall be for payment forthwith, or at such time or times and by such instalments, if any, as the plaintiff or his attorney or agent shall in writing have consented to take at the time of the entry of the plaint."

We quite appreciate Mr. Bouverie's motives in the two first clauses, which are manifestly intended to carry out the principle on which county courts are established, namely, that for the recovery of small debts, justice should be brought home to every man's door, and that he should not be allowed to inflict, either on his debtor or himself, the delay and expense of a suit in Westminster Hall. But we question the machinery by which Mr. Bouverie seeks to carry out this desirable object. The judges at chambers have already ample work on their hands, without casting on them the additional duty of trying cases by anticipation, on ex parte affidavits, in order to determine whether they are proper to be brought into Westminster Hall. We do not see why any plaintiff should not be at liberty to sue there for any amount, however small, provided he is willing to forego his costs in the event of success, and give security for the defendant's costs in case of failure. But still less do we see why he should be at liberty to drag the defendant away from his own forum to that of the plaintiff. If the law in this respect is to be altered, why should not the plaintiff be required to seek the forum of the defendant?

But the 3rd clause is, to our mind, even more objectionable. It is founded on this principle, that in a suit for a liquidated demand, unless the defendant sends to the plaintiff notice that he means to dispute the claim, the plaintiff may enter up judgment. This is inconsistent with the elementary idea of a court of justice; whose duty it is to decide on the merits of claims made by parties, and even in those cases where the party sued admits that he has no defence to the claim, he makes that admission either expressly to the court, or tacitly by non-appearance. But the putting the plaintiff in the position of the court, by leaving it in his hands to sign judgment, unless the defendant has sent, or the plaintiff alleges that he has sent, notice to him of an intention to dispute the demand, is at variance with all received notions. Besides which, this proposition of Mr. Bouverie proves too much. If this proposed legislation is good, why should the amount of the demand be limited? If the plaintiff may be both "actor" and "judex" when the demand does not exceed 40s., why not when it does not exceed 40,000s.? The smallness of the amount can make no difference in principle, and the attempt to make it do so looks like class legislation; for his 40s. is as dear to the poor man as a much larger sum is to the rich one.

We trust that this bill will receive from the House

"NO ONE IS BOUND TO CRIMINATE HIMSELF"—THE PRACTICE ON THIS RULE.

It is not our intention, in this article, to discuss the various cases which have determined the extent to which the maxim, "that no one is bound to criminate himself," obtains in this country. Our text-books (Taylor's Ev. 1174; Best's Ev. 162) are sufficiently explicit on this point. We propose to consider some questions which have arisen in the application of the rule—one of which has been the subject of much doubt.

1. It was at one time thought, that if a witness did not claim his privilege at once, but commenced replying to questions, the answers to which would have a tendency to criminate him, he was obliged to go on. In East v. Chapman (1 Moo. & M. 47), Abbott, C.J., told a witness, that he might have refused to answer at all; but that, having partially answered, he was bound to give the whole truth. This point, however, was raised in Reg. v. Garbett (2 Car. & K. 474); and it was there held, that it made no difference in the right of the witness, that he had before answered in part, but that he was entitled to claim the privilege at any stage of the inquiry. In this case, Wilde, C.J., said that it was the universal practice for the judge, when he ascertained from the opening, or from the course of the cause, that the evidence of a witness was likely to criminate him, to give a caution to the witness. In Lord Cardigan's case (Gurney's Rep. 79), Sir James Anderson was thus cautioned by the Lord High Steward; and the same course was adopted by the learned judge who presided at the trial in Fisher v. Ronalds (17 Jur., part 1, p. 393).

2. A witness must be sworn before he can claim the privilege. He cannot decline going into the box, on the ground that, if questioned on the point at issue, he would by answering criminate himself. (Osborne v. The London Dock Company, 10 Exch. 698). In Boyle v. Wiseman (10 Exch. 647) it was held, that a party to a suit, who is subpoenaed as a witness, cannot object to be sworn and examined, on the ground that the only relevant questions which could be put to him are such as would tend to criminate himself; but that the party opposite has a right to insist on his being sworn and examined, and he must then, if he thinks fit, claim his privilege not to answer any question which might be put to him.

3. It is well established that counsel will not be heard in support of the privilege of refusing to answer when claimed. In Thomas v. Newton (1 Moo. & M. 48, note), when counsel for the plaintiff objected that a particular question related to a matter on which the witness had claimed his privilege, and that he was not bound to answer it, Lord Tentarden, C.J., said that the objection belonged to the witness, and that he would not allow the counsel in the cause to argue it. This view was also confirmed in Reg. v. Garbett (ubi sup.) This rule, the policy of which is doubtful, might not be held to apply to the case of counsel suggesting to a witness the danger he was in, and the privilege he could claim, if the judge neglected to give him the proper caution in time. In Fisher v. Ronalds, Byles, Serjt., suggested that the witness was not bound to answer the question, as his answer might tend to criminate himself; and the learned judge then cautioned the witness, who thereupon declined to answer the question.

4. The greatest difficulty in applying the rule that one is bound to criminate himself, has been found in ascertaining whether the witness or the Court is to decide whether the answers to any questions put, would be likely to have this effect. On this point the law has been latterly in a very unsettled state; and though in a recent case (Reg. v. Boyes, 1 B. & S. 311) it has been made the subject of a judicial decision, there remains about it sufficient difficulty to justify such an examination of the recent authorities as would disclose the principles on which this part of our law is based. The question was raised in Reg. v. Garbett, but the judges came to no decision respecting it. In the Chancery case of Short v. Mercier (15 Jur., part 1, p. 93), the defendants objected to answer various interrogatories, on the ground, that as stock-brokers, they were advised they might subject themselves to the penalties of the Stock-jobbing Act. The Lord Chancellor (Lord Truro), after commenting upon the difficulties of the rule, said, that the question was, whether the defendants, upon the present occasion, had shewn to the Court sufficient circumstances to entitle them to credit for the oath which they had made, and to protect them from answering the questions put to them. His Lordship, throughout his judgment, proceeds upon the ground that the witness must disclose such circumstances as would shew the Court that the answers might place him in some peril. The principles upon which Lord Truro decided this case, are the same as those at which the Court of Queen's Bench has recently arrived in Reg. v. Boyes. But in the case of Fisher v. Ronalds (17 Jur., part 1, p. 393) the law was thrown into a state of confusion by the dicta of two eminent judges, from which it has only lately been partially rescued. In this case, which came for consideration before the Court in banc, Maule, J., said, "It is impossible for any one but the witness to say whether his answer will or will not tend to criminate him. He might be asked the simple question, 'Were you in London on a certain day?' and he might decline to answer, knowing that his admission that he was in London on that day was one step towards proving that he committed a murder there on that day. . . . The judge, in fact, never decides the question, but the witness. It is for the witness to say, on his oath, whether he believes that the question tends to criminate; and if he does, his answer is conclusive." Jervis, C.J., entirely concurred in this view; but Williams, J., said that it was unnecessary in this case to decide the point, because here the question put evidently might have a tendency to criminate the witness. In Osborne v. The London Dock Company (10 Exch. 698), though the dicta of the judges in Fisher v. Ronalds were considered, Parke, B., was of opinion that the weight of the authorities was in favour of the rule which requires the witness to satisfy the Court that the answer would have the effect of criminating him. In Sidebottom v. Atkins (3 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 631), Sir J. Stuart, V.C., expressed his surprise at the opinions of Jervis, C.J., and Maule, J., in Fisher v. Ronalds, opinions which he thought were not countenanced by the authorities. He referred to Best on Evidence, and to Phillips on Evidence, and concurred with the view of these learned authors, that it was impossible to say that a witness in a court was to be the sole judge, but the Court must, according to the circumstances of the case, decide whether the statement of the witness was to be conclusive upon the subject. In Adams v. Lloyd (4 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 590), Pollock, C.B., in delivering the judgment of the Court, strongly expressed his concurrence with the view of Maule, J., in Fisher v. Ronalds. He said that it would be very inconvenient to lay down, as a limit to the rule, that the party questioned is bound to satisfy the judge, or any one else, that the answer to the question might criminate him. "The only exception," said the learned Chief Baron, "I make is this—if the state of things disclosed before the Court is such as renders the judge perfectly certain, that in claiming protection, the witness is trifling with the authority of the Court, and availing himself of the rule to keep back the truth, having in reality no ground whatever for the excuse he is making for not answering the question put to him, then it would be the duty of the judge to insist upon his answering the question." Sir W. P. Wood, V.C., adopted this view in Scott v. Miller (5 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 858), and insisted that a party claiming his privilege of refusing to answer, must swear to his belief that his answer will subject him to risk. In Ex parte Aston (5 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 779) the witness refused to answer, and gave a clearly insufficient reason for not doing so. Sir J. L. Knight Bruce wished to be understood as not expressing any opinion on the observations attributed to Maule, J., in Fisher v. Ronalds. In that case the witness, in refusing to answer a question, had not given any reason for his refusal. Here, however, the witness had given as his reason, and his only reason, for not answering, that which was no reason at all.

Excepting only the opinion of Parke, B., in Osborne v. The London Dock Company, and the strong expressions of Sir J. Stuart, V.C., in Sidebottom v. Atkins, the authorities since Fisher v. Ronalds lean hitherto towards the view propounded by Maule, J., in that case. However, in Ex parte Fernandes (7 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 571), Willes, J., prepared the way for the establishment of the law on this point on the basis suggested by Lord Truro in Short v. Mercier, and advanced by Mr. Best in the second edition of his work on Evidence. In this case the learned judge, in delivering his most elaborate judgment, said—"As to the objection, that the witness refusing to answer was no offence, because it was for the witness, and not the judge, to determine whether the question was one which he was bound to answer, that is a startling proposition. Some judges, out of tenderness for the witness, have held it a sufficient excuse if he swears that, in his opinion, where such an opinion may be well founded, his answer will expose him to such proceedings; some have thought that too loose and yielding a course; but there has never been any doubt that it is for the Court to decide whether the circumstances judicially before it are such as to excuse the witness from answering." The question was next considered in Reg. v. Boyes (1 B. & S. 311), where, after a careful examination of all the authorities, it was made the subject of a solemn judicial decision. The judgment of Cockburn, C. J., in this case has removed nearly all the difficulties in the application of the rule, and will for the future be considered as containing the correct interpretation of the law on this point. The case of Reg. v. Boyes was a trial on an information for bribery, filed by the Attorney-General, under the direction of the House of Commons. One of the persons charged in the information to have been bribed by the defendant was called as a witness, and on his declining to answer any question with respect to the alleged bribery, the counsel for the Crown handed him a pardon under the Great Seal, which the witness accepted; but he still declined to answer, on the ground, that, notwithstanding the pardon, he was still, by the Act of Settlement, 12 & 13 Will. 3, c. 2, s. 3, liable to impeachment. The case came before the Court of Queen's Bench; and Cockburn, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, made use of the following observations, which, on account of their great importance, we must give in extenso:—

"It was also contended that a bare possibility of legal peril was sufficient to entitle a witness to protection; nay, further, that the witness was the sole judge as to whether his evidence would bring him into danger of the law; and that the statement of his belief to that effect, if not manifestly made malâ fide, should be received as conclusive. With the latter of these propositions we are altogether unable to concur. Upon a review of the authorities, we are clearly of opinion that the view of the law propounded by Lord Wensleydale in Osborne v. The London Dock Company, and acted upon by Sir J. Stuart, V. C., in Sidebottom v. Atkins, is the correct one; and that to entitle a party called as a witness to the privilege of silence, the Court must see from the circumstances of the case, and the nature of the evidence which the witness is called to give, that there is reasonable ground to apprehend danger to the witness from being compelled to answer. We, indeed, quite agree, that if the fact of the being in danger be once made to appear, great latitude should be allowed to him in judging for himself of the effect of any particular question; there being no doubt, as observed by Alderson, B., in Osborne v. The London Dock Company, that a question which might appear at first sight a very innocent one, might, by affording a link in a chain of evidence, become the means of bringing home an offence to the party answering. Subject to this reservation, a judge is, in our opinion, bound to insist on a witness answering, unless he is satisfied that the answer will tend to place the witness in peril."

"NOT RECEIVED IN EVIDENCE."

THE first Stamp Act, 5 & 6 Will. & M. c. 21, enacted, that no writing thereby charged with a stamp duty should be pleaded or given in evidence in any court, or admitted in any court to be good, useful, or available in law or equity, unless duly stamped. This provision was adopted or repeated, in substance, by the subsequent Stamp Acts, and is now in force, and applicable to all instruments liable to stamp duty. (31 Geo. 3, c. 25, s. 19; 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 8). The decisions prior to the 19th December, 1862, were considered to have established this distinction with regard to the application of the enactment—that an instrument cannot be received in evidence for any purpose in favour of the party producing it, on the footing of its being operative or binding in any part of it which requires a stamp, and is not duly stamped; but if, by producing it, any purpose can be served which does not involve the assumption that the deed is operative, it may be produced for that purpose; and an instrument not duly stamped may be relied on against the party producing it or proving its existence, for the purpose only of defeating a claim supported by other evidence which would be excluded by the unstamped instrument if its contents were proved.

Thus, a party who produced or proved, on his own behalf, the existence and contents of an instrument not duly stamped, was thereby prevented from giving parol evidence of a contract contained in it; although, if he made out his case without shewing the existence of the unstamped writing, the other party could not take the objection. (Reed v. Deere, 7 B. & Cr. 266; Fielder v. Ray, 6 Bing. 332; Hughes v. Budd, 4 Jur. N. S., part 1, p. 651).

So, in an indictment for forging a bill of exchange, the forged document was admissible without a stamp, for the object was to shew that it was not what it purported to be (Ree v. Hawkenworth, 1 T. R. 450); but, in an indictment for stealing a bill of exchange, the document, if unstamped, being incapable of being stamped after execution, was inadmissible (Ree v. Pooley, 3 B. & P. 311); and an unstamped policy of insurance was inadmissible in an indictment for fraudulent arson (Ree v. Gillson, 1 Taunt. 95); and an unstamped receipt for money could not be read in an indictment for embezzling the money. (Ree v. Hall, 3 Stark. 97).

There are many other authorities to the same effect; but it is unnecessary to cite them, because they have all been overruled by the important decision of the Lord Chancellor in Ex parte Wensley, in re Wensley (9 Jur. N. S., part 1, p. 315), where the question arose upon the application of the 194th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, which requires certain deeds of arrangement between a debtor and his creditors to be registered in the Court of Bankruptcy within twenty-eight days after execution by the debtor, and enacts, that such deeds "in default thereof shall not be received in evidence." There is no exception or qualification, and the prohibition is obviously and without doubt identical in meaning and effect with that which we have cited from the Stamp Act. In Ex parte Wensley, J. Wensley, a builder, had executed a deed between himself of the first part, J. B. of the second part, and the several persons whose names and seals were thereunto subscribed and affixed, being creditors of the said J. W., of the third part, by which Wensley conveyed two plots of land and the buildings thereon to J. B., upon trust to sell and apply the proceeds of the sale, first, in payment of the costs and charges of the solicitor of the debtor, and of the accountant, in relation to the arrangement, as well future as past, and then rateably in payment of the debts owing to such of the creditors as should execute the deed; and the executing creditors released the debtor. No other property was assigned, and the deed was not registered. The Lord Chancellor decided that the deed could be produced in evidence by a petitioning creditor, to shew that by the execution of it the debtor committed an act of bankruptcy; and he held, that the execution did amount to an act of bankruptcy. His Lordship said, "Supposing that a creditor sued the bankrupt, and the bankrupt produced the deed as a release; or supposing that the creditor [trustee?] brought an action, say of ejectment or trover, and the deed were produced, if it turned out that it had not been registered, the deed would not be receivable in evidence. But as the act of the bankrupt, and as against the bankrupt, though not registered, it may always be received in evidence to undo the deed, though not to support any right of the bankrupt. It cannot be received as proof of any title or release under it. The deed was rightly received in evidence."

The principle of the decision may, perhaps, be thus stated—though it is always unsafe to attempt any paraphrase of the terse and lucid language of the present Lord Chancellor:—A deed which by law cannot be received in evidence, may be received in evidence to undo the deed—i.e. to lead to a conclusion founded on the assumption that the deed is operative; or, a deed of conveyance which by law cannot be received in evidence may be received in evidence to prove the conveyance; or, a deed which cannot be received in evidence so as to delay creditors, may be received in evidence to shew that creditors are delayed by it.

Any discussion of the comparative merits of the construction which the Lord Chancellor has adopted, and that which he has overruled, may be deferred until the application and limits of the new doctrine have been illustrated by further decision.

FORM OF A TICKET-OF-LEAVE.

THE following return to an order of the House of Commons appears among the parliamentary papers issued on Tuesday, being the form of a convict's ticket-of-leave:—

Order of License to a Convict made under Stats. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 93. s. 9, and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3.

— day of —, 185—.

Her Majesty is graciously pleased to grant to —, who was convicted of — on the — day of —, and was then and there sentenced to be transported beyond the seas for the term of — years, her royal license to be at large in the United Kingdom, from the day of his liberation under this order during the remaining portion of his said term of transportation, unless it shall please her Majesty sooner to revoke or alter such license. And her Majesty hereby orders that the said — be set at liberty within thirty days from the date of this order.

Given under my hand and seal.

of Convict Prisons.

[True copy.]

(Indorsement).

NOTICE^o.

1. This license is liable to be revoked in case of misconduct.

2. It will be revoked in the case of the holder of it being convicted of any new offence, unless the punishment for that offence extends beyond the term of his former sentence.

But it is not necessary that the holder should be convicted of any new offence.

If he associates with notoriously bad characters, and leads an idle and dissolute life, with no visible means of obtaining an honest livelihood, he will be liable to be recommitted to prison under his original sentence.

3. If his license is revoked, he will have to undergo the whole remaining portion of his original sentence.

Description.

[Here follows a description of the convict, much in the style of a foreign passport.]—Morning Post.

* N. B.—The foregoing form of notice was in use up to December, 1859, when the word "will," in the second and third paragraphs, was altered to "may."

COMMISSIONERS TO ADMINISTER OATHS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following gentlemen to be Commissioners to administer oaths in the High Court of Chancery:—In London—William Clarke, of No. 18, Kensington-park-gardens, Notting-hill, and No. 29, Coleman-street, in the city of London. In England—George Littlewood Cowley, of Nottingham.

THE ROAD MURDER.—In a previous number (ante, p. 75) we mentioned the prevalence of a rumour that the Road murder case was likely to be again brought forward. The following on this subject has recently appeared in some of the papers:—"Some weeks since a statement was very generally circulated that another judicial investigation of the murder at Road, in June, 1860, was about to be made. We are informed by a correspondent, who possesses special means of knowing, that the statement had some foundation in fact. The movement originated in a report that certain members of Mr. Kent's former household had at length revealed the secret connected with that memorable crime. This report reached an officer who had previously made an active investigation of the case, and he at once determined to test the truth of the statement, and, if possible, to proceed with the clue which might then be afforded. The result of these inquiries was, that the officer thought himself possessed of sufficient information to commence another investigation; but, when the proposition was submitted to the authorities, it was decided that the grounds on which it was based were insufficient to warrant any renewed effort, either publicly or privately, and consequently the proposed inquiry was abandoned."

THE JURIST.

LONDON, APRIL 18, 1863.

THE law respecting the liability of innkeepers for loss or injury to the goods of their guests will shortly be discussed in Parliament. Two separate bills are now before it—one, brought in by Mr. W. Martin, Mr. G. Duff, and Mr. Hunt, "to amend the law respecting the liability of innkeepers, and to prevent certain frauds upon them;" the other, brought in by Mr. Butt and Dr. Brady, "to define and limit the liability of innkeepers."

The law of England on this subject was in strong contrast to that of continental nations. The old story abroad is well known, that in some countries when an innkeeper offended by extortion, insolence, or otherwise, his ready answer to any complaint was, "Quere aliud hospitium;" well knowing, that in many cases this was imposing on the unfortunate traveller an impossibility; and, were it even otherwise, at least exposing him to similar wrong and insult in another place. Our common law laid the axe to the root of this evil, by declaring, that as inns are for the public good, and the necessities and convenience of travellers, an innkeeper shall not be permitted to select his guests, and must receive into his inn every person against whose admission no tangible objection (such as intoxication or the like) can be made, and who is willing to deposit a reasonable sum in advance as security for the expense of his entertainment. And should the innkeeper violate this, he is liable not only to an action at the suit of the injured party, but also to an indictment at the suit of the Crown.

The wisdom of this law, in a commercial country especially, is too obvious to need comment. An impudent attempt to limit its operation was, indeed, made in Rea v. Ivens (7 Car. & P. 213), where an innkeeper sought to justify his refusing to receive a guest, on the ground that he was travelling at an hour of the night after the innkeeper's family had gone to bed; and also that he was travelling on a Sunday, and refused to tell his name and abode. These defences were all overruled by Coleridge, J., who tried the case, and, in answer to the first, said, "Why are inns established? For the reception of travellers, who are often very far distant from their own homes. Now, at what time is it most essential that travellers should not be denied admission into the inns? I should say when they are benighted, and when, from any casualty, or from the badness of the roads, they arrive at an inn at a very late hour. Indeed, in former times, when the roads were much worse, and were much infested with robbers, a late hour of the night was the time, of all others, at which the traveller most required to be received into an inn."

The law on the subject of innkeepers has not always been perfectly understood. A notion grew up, which seems to have been founded on a dictum of Eyres, J., in Newton v. Trigg (1 Show. 269), whence it found its way into several books, e. g. Bac. Ab., "Inns and Innkeepers," D., 9; Wentworth's Pleader, &c., that the innkeeper, who undoubtedly has a lien for his reckoning on the goods of his guest, has also a lien on his person. This opinion seems to have prevailed, among the vulgar at least, until the case of Sunbolf v. Alford (3 M. & W. 248; 2 Jur., O. S., 110), decided 146 years after Newton v. Trigg. It would be difficult to answer the reasoning of the Court in the later case. "If," says Lord Abinger, "an innkeeper has a right to detain the person of his guest for the non-payment of his bill, he has a right to detain him until the bill is paid, which may be for life; so that this defence supposes, that, by the common law, a man who owes a small debt, for which he could not be imprisoned by legal process, may yet be detained by an innkeeper for life. The proposition is monstrous. Again: if he have any right to detain the person, surely he is a judge in his own cause; for he is then the party to determine whether the amount of his bill is reasonable, and he must detain him till the man brings an action against him for false imprisonment, and then, if it were determined that the charge was not reasonable, and it appeared that the party had made an offer of a reasonable sum, the detainer would be unlawful."

It is, however, worthy of observation, that the supposed right of an innkeeper to detain the person of his guest was not the actual point raised in Sunbolf v. Alford. That was an action against the defendant for assaulting and beating the plaintiff, stripping and pulling off his coat, and converting it to his own use; to which the defendant pleaded a justification, that he was an innkeeper and the plaintiff his guest, and on the latter refusing to pay his reckoning, the defendant stripped off his coat and detained it as a security or pledge for the same. The sufficiency of this answer was therefore the question: on which Parke, B., says, "There is, at all events, no power to do what this plea justifies—namely, to strip the guest of his clothes; for, if there be, then, if the innkeeper take the coat off his back, and that prove to be an insufficient pledge, he may go on and strip him naked; and that would apply either to a male or to a female. That is a consequence so utterly absurd, that it cannot be entertained for a moment." The observations of the Court in this case against the existence of a lien on the person, are, therefore, to a certain extent, extra-judicial, although we believe no lawyer at the present day would question their soundness.

An innkeeper is bound by law to take care of goods or money brought into his inn by a guest. Here the law is very strict against the innkeeper. If they are lost or injured he is prima facie liable, and it is no defence that they were stolen by his servants or others. The innkeeper may, however, exonerate himself by proof that the loss was occasioned by the misconduct or gross negligence of the guest, and, perhaps, even by want of reasonable care on his part. (See the note to Calge's case, in 1 Smith's L. C. 106, 5th ed.)

It is with the view of relieving innkeepers from a part of their liability in this respect that the bills in question have been introduced into Parliament. The recital of Bill, No. 1, is as follows:—"Whereas it has happened that from the great facility given to travelling by railways and otherwise the quantity and value of the goods and property brought by travellers to inns is so much increased that the old common-law rule, which renders innkeepers responsible for the goods of their guests which may be stolen or lost, has rendered the trade of an innkeeper extremely hazardous and dangerous: and whereas it is but fair and reasonable that a remedy should be provided in this behalf;" while that of Bill, No. 2, is, "Whereas innkeepers are by the law of England bound to keep safely in their inns the goods which persons may bring with and have with them while stopping as guests in such inn, and are liable for any loss incurred by their failure in fulfilling such obligation; and whereas innkeepers under such law incur in the case of every guest an unknown and indefinite liability, and are often made liable for great and unreasonable amounts, and that even in cases in which they are not chargeable with any want of proper and reasonable care, and are also subject to frauds practised on them in relation to alleged losses of goods by persons stopping in their inns, and it is expedient to provide a remedy for the same."

Bill, No. 1, then proposes to enact by sect. 1, "No innkeeper shall hereafter be holden to be responsible for goods or property of his guests where the value thereof exceeds 20*l.*, except for such as may be deposited with such innkeeper expressly for safe custody; and where such goods or property shall be so deposited for safe custody, it shall be lawful for such innkeeper to require that each article thereof shall be exhibited to him, and its value declared to him." And by sect. 2, "Where goods or property are so deposited with and exhibited to an innkeeper, and the same are afterwards stolen or lost, such innkeeper shall not be concluded by the price or value set thereon by the guest, as is aforesaid, but it shall be incumbent on the guest to prove the actual value of the same."

We next proceed to Bill, No. 2. It proposes to enact by sect. 1, "In any action hereafter to be brought against any innkeeper for any loss occasioned by his failure to fulfil his obligation as such innkeeper to keep safely the goods of any guest, no greater damages shall be recovered than 20*l.*, unless it shall be averred in the pleadings, and expressly proved on any trial of such action, that such loss was occasioned by the wilful default or misconduct of the innkeeper or his servants, or by the want on his part of reasonable care." By sect. 2, "No innkeeper shall hereafter be deemed liable for the safe keeping of any of the following goods, by reason of the same being brought by a guest into his inn; that is to say, any gold or silver coin of the realm or of any foreign country, or any precious metals, or any bank notes or other securities for money, to any greater extent in the whole than 50*l.*, nor for any ornaments, jewellery, or other valuable articles to any greater extent than 50*l.*, nor for any goods of any nature or kind whatsoever which:

such guest shall carry with him otherwise than in the way of his trade, unless in each and every case such innkeeper shall be apprised of the possession of such articles by his guest, and shall agree to be responsible for the safe keeping of the same, in which case he shall be liable as if this act had not been passed. And by sect. 3, "Nothing in this act contained shall alter or affect the liability of an innkeeper further or otherwise than is herein expressly declared, nor shall it in any matter alter or affect the liability of any innkeeper upon any contract relating to the safe keeping of any goods, nor shall it in any manner protect any innkeeper in any case in which he may be liable, independently of his common-law liability to keep safely the goods of his guests."

It will be remarked that these bills differ in this, among other respects, that Bill, No. 2, assumes the common law to have been wrong ab initio, while Bill, No. 1, proceeds on the ground that the common law, though probably a just one originally, requires modification in consequence of "the great facility given to travelling" in modern times. We will not stop to dispute this latter proposition, although possibly that facility might be found a reason for holding the innkeeper even more tightly than before: but any attack on the principle of the common law, which places innkeepers under these peculiar responsibilities we look on as very mischievous and short-sighted, for the reasons stated at the beginning of the present article; and we commend the following passage to all concerned in the question:—"Rigorous as this law may seem," observes Sir W. Jones (Bailments, 96-97), "and hard as it may actually be in one or two particular instances, it is founded on the great principle of public utility, to which all private considerations ought to yield; for travellers, who must be numerous in a rich and commercial country, are obliged to rely almost implicitly on the good faith of innholders, whose education and morals are usually none of the best, and who might have frequent opportunities of associating with ruffians or pilferers, while the injured guest could seldom or never obtain legal proof of such combinations, or even of their negligence, if no actual fraud had been committed by them."

THE JURIST.

LONDON, APRIL 25, 1863.

THOSE nations which, when neutral, have inveighed most strongly against the rights of belligerents in maritime warfare, have in many cases, when they themselves became belligerents, repudiated the doctrines they formerly laid down, and carried their proceedings against neutrals to the extreme limit of the law. For instance, the armed neutrality insisted upon the doctrine of "free ships, free goods," yet not many years after that principle was abandoned by nearly all the members of the northern confederacy, the great leader of that alliance—Russia, being the chief instigator of the unusual severities which were adopted towards neutrals.

In recent times the United States of America, or what may, perhaps, be now more properly termed the residuary portion of such States, have afforded a signal example of the manner in which a country, formerly endeavouring to enlist the sympathy of other nations, in favour of ill-used neutrals, has, when itself a belligerent, thrown all its former arguments to the winds, and has insisted, not only upon its right to enforce, as against neutrals, the utmost severities permissible by maritime law, but has attempted to set aside that law altogether. Of this, the case of The Trent is a well-known instance.

* Manning's Law of Nations, 271.

During the whole of the present war between the Federal and Confederate States, England has always been ready to admit the fair exercise of belligerent rights against her own citizens as neutrals. What her Courts of Admiralty in former wars enforced against other States as neutrals, England has never objected to on the part of American cruisers. England has never resisted the right of visitation and search, nor has she attempted to break a blockade which has pressed with unexampled severity upon large masses of her manufacturing population, although such blockade in many instances has been shewn to be not altogether regular, and, in fact, to have been attended with sufficient irregularity to render its legality, according to well-established precedents, at least doubtful.

The fairness with which England, as a neutral, has acted to the Federal States as belligerents, has been met with in a far different spirit. The episode of The Trent shewed how entirely international law would be disregarded by the persons who conduct the affairs of the Federal States, when they believed that lawless acts might be perpetrated with impunity, and the re-appointment of the naval officer by whom that outrage was perpetrated upon the British flag, would naturally lead any one to infer that similar acts of lawlessness were either contemplated, or would not improbably take place.

Several cases of the seizure of British vessels by Federal cruisers has lately taken place, under circumstances so grossly illegal, that unless our Government interferes, the legitimate trade of British merchants will be seriously injured. The only case to which we shall now allude is that of The Peterhoff, although there are others of quite as flagrant a character. The Peterhoff was bound from the port of London to Matamoras, a neutral port. Her destination, therefore, was legal; and this was borne out by all the documents which, according to mercantile usage, such vessels carry; nor does it appear, either from the nature of the cargo or from any other circumstance, that the destination of The Peterhoff was for any blockaded port. The seizure there seems to have taken place either from mere caprice, or upon the chance, that at some future time something like evidence might turn up, upon which some grounds of suspicion might be manufactured and alleged. The question for the consideration of our Government and of this country is this, whether, according to the doctrines of international law a neutral vessel, having apparently a lawful destination, can be lawfully seized by a belligerent, although all the papers are regular, and her owners have fulfilled all legal and commercial formalities to prove the legality of the voyage, provided only that the belligerent merely alleges a suspicion that her destination may be to a blockaded port?

In a recent case, which arose out of the Russian war, The Ostsee Voss (Spinks, 174), the law upon this subject was well laid down in the Privy Council. There a neutral had been seized, without any ostensible cause, for an alleged breach of the blockade of Cronstadt. As it appeared distinctly from the papers of the ship that she had committed no breach of blockade, restitution, with costs and damages, was ordered. "By the usage of all countries," said Lord Kingsdown, in giving judgment, "captors have a great interest in increasing the number of prizes. The temptation to send in ships for adjudication is sufficiently strong. Is it too much to say, that, when no ground of suspicion can be shewn, and all that the captor can allege is, that he did wrong under a mistake, he should make good, in temperate damages, the injury which he has occasioned? Ought a captor to be permitted to say to the captured, 'True, nothing suspicious appeared in your case at the time of the seizure; but upon further inquiry something might have been discovered. I had a right to take my chance; you have nothing to complain of. I subjected you to no unnecessary inconvenience; go about your business, and be thankful for your escape?' We cannot think that this would be deemed a satisfactory answer to a British neutral seized by a foreign belligerent."

Thus was the law laid down in our own Courts of Admiralty, where a vessel seems to have been seized under a mistake that Cronstadt was under a blockade at a time when it appears that no blockade had really been proclaimed. In the case of The Peterhoff no such excuse can be alleged. The destination of the vessel was to a neutral port; there was no ground for suspicion at the time of the seizure; and we fully agree with the law as laid down by Lord Kingsdown, that the Federal commander had no right to seize the British vessel merely upon the ground "that upon further inquiry something might be discovered, and that he had a right to take his chance."

The Federal authorities, however, seem not to be content with violating the rules of international law in the seizure of British vessels; but their minister at this Court (Mr. Charles Francis Adams) has even assumed authority to give British vessels license to trade to neutral ports, as if we had not that right already without any permission.

The following is a letter of the American Minister, giving leave to a British vessel to go to Matamoras:—

"Legation of the United States.

"London, April 9."

"Amid the multitude of fraudulent and dishonest enterprises from this Kingdom to furnish supplies to the rebels in the United States, through the pretence of a destination to some port in Mexico, it gives me pleasure to distinguish one which has a different and a creditable purpose. Messrs. — have furnished me with evidence, which is perfectly satisfactory to me, that they are really bound to Matamoras, with a cargo intended for the Mexicans. I therefore very cheerfully give them this certificate, at their request. It is not the disposition of the Government of the United States to interfere in any way with an honest neutral trade, and it is deeply to be regretted that the frauds which have been so extensively practised in this country have contributed so much to throw it under suspicion.

"CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

"Admiral Dupont, &c."

Few persons reading the letter of Mr. Charles Francis Adams would suppose, after the virtuous indignation which he expresses against dishonest neutral trade, that the cargo of the vessel, which he distinguished as having such a creditable purpose, was a cargo of arms—contraband of war, intended for the Mexicans, and of course to be used against the French, with whom they are at war.

It seems, moreover, that vessels under the French flag are allowed to go unchallenged to Matamoras, and the mercantile marine of the Federal States are also unmolested, carrying on a thriving trade with that port.

If our Government submits to the proceedings of the Federal States, with reference to this port, English vessels will be worse off than if the port of Matamoras were actually blockaded, for nothing is clearer than this—that a relaxation of a blockade in favour of belligerents, to the exclusion of neutrals, is clearly illegal; nor will a similar relaxation in favour of some neutrals make it legal. (Northcote v. Douglas—The Franciska, 10 Moo. P. C. 37).

We have not thought it necessary to allude to the treatment by the American captors of British crews and their officers. For this, as well as for the illegal seizure of our vessels, we trust that our Government will demand and obtain reparation, and a satisfactory assurance that similar acts will not be repeated.

JURIDICAL SOCIETY.—A meeting of this society took place at its rooms, 4, St. Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square, on Monday, the 20th instant, W. M. Best, Esq., in the chair; when a paper was read by Mr. W. Marshall, intitled "Copyright in the Fine Arts." A discussion ensued, in which the society was addressed by the Chairman, Mr. C. Clerk, Mr. F. Lawrence, Mr. G. Sweet, and Mr. F. M. Nicholls.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—This is not "new doctrine." Your correspondent "G. S." has overlooked some of the decisions at common law, in which this same question has arisen under the corresponding language of the old Stamp Acts. (See Coppock v. Bower, 4 M. & W. 361).

The argument runs thus—every instrument must be stamped according to its legal operation—i. e. if it be an agreement, it must bear an agreement stamp; if it be a conveyance, a conveyance stamp; if it be a deed, a deed stamp. I remember the late Mr. Baron Alderson, at Nisi Prius, in Horton v. Riley (11 M. & W. 492). A creditor, on signing a composition deed, had also taken an instrument purporting to secure him a further sum, which having been paid, action brought to recover it back.

This instrument was put in by the plaintiff to prove the legal fraud on the other creditors; objection, it has no stamp. "What stamp," says the judge, "does this require?" "An agreement stamp," my Lord. "No; this is not an agreement; the law will not let it be an agreement; if it were an agreement, I should nonsuit the plaintiff."

The same question has often arisen upon asking for an adjudication of bankruptcy, treating an unstamped deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors as the act of bankruptcy.

The argument has been—this is not a need nor a conveyance; the object of the adjudication is to prevent it operating as either one or the other.

The same point arose again specifically upon the 194th section, before that most respectable authority, Mr. Commissioner Holroyd. (In re Mew and Thorne, 5 Law T. 435).

The following passages from the commissioner's observations are striking:—

[If he (the petitioning creditor) makes it (the deed) an act of bankruptcy, it is on the ground of its being a fraudulent and void deed as against the creditors. He is not putting it in evidence with the view of enforcing it as a legitimate deed, but with the view of upsetting the deed altogether, and making it an act of bankruptcy. It seems to me to be the same as in the case of a forged note which has not been stamped; though not stamped, it is allowed to be put in evidence as proof of the forgery. I have said the same over and over again with regard to deeds put in evidence, but which have borne no stamp; it is the same principle exactly.]

Argument—In the present case there was a transfer of property, therefore the principle would not apply.

[The Commissioner.—No; it is not sought to make it a transfer of property at all; but it is contended, that the property ought to come to the creditors, and not to pass under the deed.] Again—[Those words, "and in default thereof shall not be received in evidence," must necessarily apply where the deed is attempted to be put in evidence to enforce a contract, and not where it is put in evidence simply for the purpose of upsetting it, and making it an act of bankruptcy. I may add, that this is my deliberate opinion, after mature consideration, and not a mere offhanded expression of opinion.]

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

E. W.

[Our correspondent appears to be as much in the dark on this subject as the Lord Chancellor and Mr. Commissioner Holroyd (of the latter of which judges, however, we would speak with the greatest respect). The doctrine in Ex parte Wensley and In re Mew and Thorne may be familiar at Basinghall-street, but it is thoroughly new to Westminster Hall. Coppock v. Bower is one of a large and well-known class of cases which have nothing in common with Ex parte Wensley, but establish the principle, that though an unstamped instrument cannot be read to prove that it was an instrument operative according to its purport, it may be read, as part of the res gestæ, in proof of an illegal transaction. The agreement in Coppock v. Bower was used, not to prove that the plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement in writing having a certain effect, but to prove their intentions, to shew by their own statement that a certain I O U was given for an illegal consideration. So, the agreement in Horton v. Riley was admitted, not as evidence that the parties to it bound themselves according to its terms, but as a statement explaining the object with which money had been paid. The documents in all these cases are received as admissions by the parties, not as operative instruments. The remark attributed by our correspondent to the late Baron Alderson was beside the point, and must be classed with the many sayings at Nisi Prius which the reporters judiciously suppress.

A conveyance of land may, under certain circumstances, be—not an illegal act, but—an act giving to the Court of Bankruptcy jurisdiction to adjudge the grantor a bankrupt; one consequence of which adjudication, if it is made, is, that the property, which passed by the deed (otherwise there was no act of bankruptcy), becomes divested out of the grantee, and vested in the grantor's assignees in bankruptcy. Subject to that contingency, the conveyance, though an act of bankruptcy, is lawful and valid; and if no adjudication is made within a year, the title of the grantee is indefeasible. The act of bankruptcy relied on in Ex parte Wensley was a conveyance of real estate, which could only be by deed; and the decision came to this—that the unregistered deed was admissible to prove, not that somebody did something else, but that the deed operated in the way in which it was intended to operate, subject to the liability of being set aside by the Court of Bankruptcy. It would have been as reasonable to treat a grant of land by word of mouth as an act of bankruptcy.

Baron Alderson's remark, as stated by our correspondent, though it did not give the true ground of the admissibility of the document which he received, is still irreconcilable with Lord Westbury's doctrine. "If it were an agreement, I should nonsuit the plaintiff," said the Baron. "If it were not a conveyance, the petitioner would have no case," implied the Lord Chancellor.

The cases in bankruptcy, in which unstamped deeds have been admitted, were probably cases in which, as the deeds could be stamped at any time, the objection was not insisted on, or they are to be classed with many other cases in bankruptcy.]

J. S. M. Fonblanque, Esq., has, we believe, retired from the office of Commissioner in Bankruptcy.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MAY 2, 1863.

THE Law Amendment Society has undertaken a task, for which it deserves the thanks of the Profession;—reform of the reports, and the reporting system. At a meeting of the society, held on the 2nd March, it was agreed to refer the whole reporting question to a committee (ante p. 118); and at a subsequent meeting power was conferred on them to bring the subject to the notice of the Government (ante p. 154). In pursuance of these resolutions, a deputation of the society recently waited on the Lord Chancellor. The deputation referred to the reports of the special committee of the society; the resolutions which had been adopted at their general meetings in favour of reducing the present reports into some systematic order, and of adopting in future a better plan of reporting the decisions of the Courts of common law and equity. His Lordship in reply adverted to the great difficulties in which the subject was involved, the conflicting interests which had to be conciliated, the schemes which had been propounded, and the general working of the present system. His Lordship stated that the subject was so important, and surrounded with so many difficulties, that he should consider the interview as preliminary, and that upon some future occasion he would receive the deputation again.

We shall anxiously watch any further steps that may be taken in this matter; for while the evil to be met is great, it is not easy to point out a safe and sufficient remedy. So far as relates to the body of reports already in existence, the question is only a branch of the far more general one, codification or consolidation of the law. With respect to the future, it has often been suggested that the proper remedy would be, that the Courts should appoint certain persons to furnish authentic reports of their proceedings, and prohibit the citation of or reference to any others. A project of this kind, put forward in the Law Magazine about twenty years ago, went a step farther, and proposed, that the judges should point out to the reporters beforehand what cases, and parts of cases, were fit to be reported. On this being brought forward, Lord Denman alluded to it from the bench, stating that the judges had a sufficient amount of labour and responsibility already, without imposing on them an additional duty of this nature. All such projects are, however, open to still greater objections on constitutional grounds; for the effect of them would be, to arm the judges with the means of suppressing at pleasure the report of any decision, sound or unsound. But although they could suppress the report, they could not suppress the memories of those who heard the decision. Judges are bound by previous decisions, not by the reports of them; and the suppression of reports would have the effect of substituting the testimony of slippery memory, as to those decisions, for the deliberate written testimony of persons who have heard them.

One very prevalent, but very erroneous, notion on this subject is, the supposed excellence of the ancient reports, and supposed degeneracy of the modern ones. Any person who will examine for himself will soon become satisfied of the unfounded character of this. The earlier Year Books seem well reported, but then it must be remembered that we have no cotemporary reports, and scarcely any other means, to corroborate or check them. After the discontinuance of the Year Books, the system of reporting fell into private hands, and the value of the different reports varies almost ad infinitum; besides which it is important to remember that many of those reports were only drawn up by judges or counsel for their own guidance in practice, and with little or no view to other publicity. But rash and ignorant, indeed, is the attempt to affix the stamp of infallibility on any of them. Take, for instance, the case of Webb v. Paternoster, which is reported in five different books (Palm. 71; Roll. 143, 152; Noy, 98; Popham, 151; and Godbolt, 282), the discrepancies in which caused no small embarrassment to the Court of Exchequer in Wood v. Leadbitter (19 M. & W. 838). Even the reports of Sir E. Coke are not beyond impeachment: the observations that have been made on Chudleigh's case (1 Rep. 113 b.) are well known; and the accuracy of the report of the second resolution in Spencer's case (5 Rep. 16 b.) seems very questionable. (See Minshull v. Oakes, 2 H. & Norm. 793; 4 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 169). The comparative value of the different reports is a subject on which a volume might be written.

Numerous are the charges brought against our modern reporters, some well founded, and others groundless. Extreme prolixity in setting out the facts of the cases reported, the reporting numbers of cases which are thoroughly useless, as neither establishing any new proposition, nor confirming any doubtful point, nor illustrating any matter requiring illustration. It must, indeed, be admitted that many of the cases in our modern books,—especially those relating to the construction of wills, the Statute of Frauds, and the admissibility of extrinsic evidence to explain written documents;—might be erased from them with the most perfect safety. But it may fairly be questioned whether the undue number of our reporters at the present day, or the excessive number of cases reported by them, is chargeable solely to the reporters. We believe that one great source of the evil will be found in the style of discussion now adopted. Lord Coke correctly says (4 Rep. 94 a.), that the party who would have the benefit of precedents must search for them, for the Court will not search for them; and if no precedents, or no sufficient precedents, are adduced, the Court will give judgment according to law and reason. A contrary course seems pursued among us. Cases are rarely discussed on principle, and the efforts of Court and counsel seem directed almost exclusively to finding out some authority, or semblance of authority, bearing on the question: for which purpose the loosest dicta of judges;—dicta which ought never to have been reported, either as being ill considered in themselves, or inconsistent with principle, or, if true, are only so when taken with their context;—are seized on with avidity, and too often form the foundation of decisions. Of course, if counsel choose so to argue, and the bench choose so to decide, it is not for us to complain; but it is unjust to cast blame on the reporters for doing that which they are encouraged, and even incited to do.

VICE-CHANCELLOR STUART'S COURT.

SIR J. STUART, V. C., shortly after the sitting of the Court, addressing Mr. Bacon, said—There are very extraordinary frauds in the course of perpetration now, of a kind unheard of, so far as I am aware. A man, who signs his name as “Ashley Cooper,” goes about serving notices upon poor people in the country, purporting to be made under decrees of this Court. He charges 6s. 8d., and threatens such people with loss of their property if they do not appear. I hold one of these notices in my hand at this moment. It is as follows:—

“In Chancery.—In re Moore, Defendant.

“No. 43, 1863.—In the matter of Francis Anthony Moore, who died in London on or about the 31st day of January, 1845.

“Lincoln's inn.

“Let the heir-at-law or next of kin, or any one claiming relationship with the said Mr. Moore, deceased, file his, her, or their claim forthwith, at the chambers of the Masters of the Rolls, at the Rolls' yard, Chancery-lane, Middlesex, or, in default thereof, they will be peremptorily excluded from the benefit of the said decree. Thursday, the 16th day of April, 1863, at twelve o'clock at noon, is appointed for hearing and adjudication upon the claim.—Dated the 20th of March, 1863.

“90007. “Sir JOHN STUART, Vice-Chancellor.

The above was indorsed as follows:—

“This notice of claim was served by me on Mr. John Moore in person, this 11th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1863.

“ASHLEY COOPER.

“Received, Ashley Cooper, April 11, 1863.”

The address given by the person serving this paper was Kew-green, Surrey. There are many letters which come addressed, some to my chief clerks and others to myself, making inquiries in consequence of the notices which have been served upon the writers. I have no power in the matter, and I do not know what I can do to prevent money being extracted from people in the manner I have stated. To a person who is not illiterate, the notice which I have read is nonsense.

upon the face of it, because I am thereby made to order somebody to appear before the Master of the Rolls. The notices, however, seem to have been sufficient to have extracted 6s. 8d. from a number of people. Although I have no means of preventing such a fraud as that of which I am speaking, it is right that people should be put upon their guard.

[The law is not powerless in this matter. The conduct of Mr. Ashley Cooper looks very like a contempt of the Court of Chancery; and not only could any money paid under the circumstances here stated be recovered back, but the transaction would support an indictment for obtaining money under false pretences. Still, the possibility of Mr. Ashley Cooper's disappearance with the money obtained by him renders the above notice of the matter by Vice-Chancellor Stuart, very salutary, in order to put the public on their guard against similar frauds.—Ed.]

REVIEW.

Notanda on Law, Equity, Bankruptcy, Admiralty, Divorce, and Probate Cases. By TENISON EDWARDS, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. No. 1, 8co., pp. 8. [Day.]

"How shall we note up our books?" If the reports were kept within bounds, the answer would be, "As our forefathers did." The method of our forefathers has long ceased to be possible. But if the plague of reports is increasing, the impatience of its victims is also increasing; and in that impatience and the judicial blindness of the reporter class we see a broad ray of hope for speedy deliverance. On the first page of the publication now before us is an advertisement of "The Weekly Reporter," with the audacious boast, that "upwards of 600 cases have already been published in the twenty-two numbers of the current volume (XI) of 'The Weekly Reporter'!" Whither do these gentlemen expect to go, or rather to be sent by an exasperated bar? How is it that Mr. Scott has so long escaped the retribution due to him, and still survives in his 51st volume? During the present year he has published four parts (each at half-a-guinea) of stuff that, instead of being stored up in our libraries, ought to be spurned with contempt.

Relief must be near. In the meantime Mr. Edwards offers us a palliative, and a very efficient one, the nature of which cannot be better explained than in his own words:—

"The question is: How can the practitioner with the greatest facility make himself acquainted with the latest decisions upon any given subject? And my reply is: By looking, not through a dozen annual digests, but by looking to the standard text-books, such as Sugden's Vendors and Purchasers, Williams on Executors, Jarman on Wills, &c.; and there, in juxtaposition with the topics treated of, and on the very page where the author in his next edition would introduce the modern decisions, to find clear and intelligible notes of such decisions as have been come to upon the particular topic since the edition of the work. Or, if the question turn upon the construction of a statute, to turn to the section of that statute, and there to find like clear and intelligible notes of such decisions upon that particular section. I have explained my plan in answering the above question, and I have no fear of a contradiction from any practical man.

"A little further development, and I have stated my plan. I read every judicial decision of the Queen's Courts in England and Ireland reported in the authorised and unauthorised reports, and I make from them, or such of them as are of any value, notes of the result of the decisions in the shortest, most pithy, and suggestive language that I can select; such, in fact, as I should write into my own text-books or statutes. I head the note, in the case of the construction of a statute, with the statute and the section; and in the case of it not being upon the construction of a statute, I head it with a standard text-book upon the particular subject, with the paging or other reference, such as part, chapter, and section, where the note should be placed; and, lest the edition of that book in the subscriber's library should not be the same as that from which I take my reference, I will also say, 'citing such and such a leading case,' by which means the proper reference may easily be found out by the table of cases in the text-book, and the leading case referred to may also have a note placed in its margin, if the subscriber should have a library of reports.

"These little notes are printed in very clear type, on one side only of the paper, and are intended to be severed from each other, and placed, by means of paste or gum, according to the reference at the head of each note. There are four modes in which these notes may be used. They may be affixed to the page of the book referred to, they may be copied by the clerk into the page of the book, they may be affixed to a blank page inserted in the text-book, or they may be numbered and inserted on blank sheets at the end of the book, placing a reference by its number at the page or place referred to. I take it that if a man has in his library the practical statutes of the present and last reigns, together with a dozen, or even less, of the standard text-books of the day, and that he places, or causes to be placed, these little notes where directed, he can at once lay his hands upon nine-tenths of all the modern cases, and indeed upon all the cases of ordinary practical utility. It is to be remembered that even should the subscriber not have the text-book to which I refer, yet if he have one on the same subject he may generally find the proper place in his own text-book by the topic, and the leading case cited in my text-book. I will carefully select such text-books for my references as I find best arranged as to matter and index. And having so done I will invariably refer to them, unless in exceptional cases; but should I refer to a text-book other than my regular one, I will also give a reference to my regular text-book."

A single extract from the "Notanda" will be sufficient to shew how this plan is carried out:—

"3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 39; Russ. on Arbitration, part 2, c. 3, s. 3, p. 154.—The court or judge ought, on application for that purpose, to revoke a reference to arbitration, when they see that the arbitrator is about to commit an error in law; as, for instance, where he has rejected evidence that ought to be admitted. Is re an Arbitration, Hart v. Duke, Q. B., 21/11/62; 32 L. J., N. S., 55."

Thirty or forty of these notelets might, if necessary, be placed opposite to a single page of a text-book, by gumming them successively to the back edge of the inner margin, and to each other, still leaving the margin of the book available for written notes.

Further explanation, and answers to some objections, will be found in the introductory remarks. We are sure that the undertaking will be warmly welcomed by every working barrister and every reading attorney, and we heartily wish it success; indeed, all who aim at being lawyers in reality, as well as in name, have a direct personal interest in it.

We may add, that "the subscription to 'Notanda' will be 12s. 6d. per annum, postage free. Adhesive copies will be 2s. 6d. per year extra." The publisher proposes "ten or possibly twelve issues in the year, each of eight pages, containing in the year's issue from about 3000 to 4000 notes."

* Commencing with 1 Moo. & Sc., 1853.

It would be well if the new statutes, as well as the decisions, were included in the publication.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MAY 9, 1863.

IN our last number we referred to the present vicious system of reports and reporting, together with the laudable steps taken by the Law Amendment Society to supply a remedy for the evil. We there intimated that, to our mind, one great cause of it was the departure by modern tribunals from the practice of ancient times, namely, to decide questions on principle whenever possible, and never desert it unless compelled by an express and distinct decision of a tribunal of competent jurisdiction. The modern practice, on the contrary, is to look anxiously for some authority for every thing, however trivial, and expect every case to be reported, whether of due interest or not; the inevitable consequence of which is, to encourage indiscriminate, ill-digested, and hasty reporting, with all the evils which necessarily follow in their train. And in this the efforts of the judges have been unhappily too well seconded by the reporters themselves; many of whom report cases of so insignificant a character, and important ones in such a crude, inadequate, and slovenly manner, and both not unfrequently so inaccurately, as to render their reports ignes fatui to mislead instead of guides to direct. A modern reporter too often lacks the courage to omit a case from his reports, and if taxed with the omission, say what he thinks,—that it is either a decision on a combination of facts, interesting to none but the parties concerned; or that the matter of law decided in it is so obvious, that to report it would be an insult to the understanding alike of his readers and himself.

There is, however, another important circumstance connected with this subject, namely, the views relative to reporting held by the judges at different periods. In former times, they looked on it with no favour; and, indeed, it seems to have been a somewhat unsafe employment. So late as 1765, Sir James Burrow, in the preface to his reports, thought it necessary to apologise for publishing them. He says, he is aware that reporting its decisions without leave or license is a contempt of Court; but contends, that although that rule applies to reports of causes depending, or soon after they are over, a publication of reports at a distance of time, merely as a matter of science, has not been animadverted upon, though within the letter of the law. At the latter end of the last century, the stupid notion of reporting being a contempt of Court was completely dispelled; and in most of the courts a regular series of reports has been published ever since; not exactly under the license, but with the favour and assistance of the judges, who long refused to allow any other reports of their proceedings to be cited. This continued until about a quarter of a century ago, when the characteristic vices of all monopolies—deterioration and oppression—having shewn themselves in the reporting system, a re-action set in; and at last it came to be understood, that any report authenticated by the name of a barrister might be cited. This was a great stride in the opposite direction. A report has no authority in itself—it is only evidence of what has been done by judicial tribunals; its use being, that the tribunal to which it is cited may assume, without inquiry, that a former tribunal has decided in a particular way. Surely, therefore, no report ought to be listened to in any court until it has established a reputation for general accuracy. From this sketch of the history of reporting, it will be seen that discouragement, coercion, exclusiveness, and unrestrained license, have been tried one after the other; with what advantage let the present state of things declare.

The securing full and faithful reports of the cases decided in courts of justice is matter of interest in every civilised community, but is of increased importance in England, which is governed by a lex non scripta, and not by a code. At the same time it would be a great mistake to assume that the existence of a code renders judicial reporting unnecessary. Look at France, a country governed by the Code Napoléon—a code which expressly prohibits the judges from laying down general principles to influence future cases (Code Civil, Titre Préliminaire, §. 5), and requires every tribunal to decide the questions before it on what it deems the true construction of the code. But although a judge in France is prohibited from saying what we so often hear in our courts, "If this matter were res integra, I should decide in such or such a way, but feel myself bound by a previous decision to rule otherwise," it is impossible to prevent his hearing the decisions of his predecessors, and forming his judgment by them. Besides, the Code Napoléon does not prohibit his listening to those decisions, if cited to him ex relatione or from a book; and we accordingly find that in the practice of the French tribunals reports are constantly cited de facto, though not de jure. The French newspaper "Le Droit," for instance, contains reports of the decisions of the tribunals, and bears as strong a resemblance to THE JURIST as the difference of the two legal systems will admit. But the state of things in France is far more unsatisfactory than that in England, and leaves open a wide field for judicial iniquity. Suppose a report cited to a judge in France. If the decision assists the party whom the judge is desirous to favour, he gives the decision in accordance; and if his conduct is questioned afterwards, pleads the former decision, and complains of the hardship of being called to account for doing what his predecessor was permitted to do with impunity. If, however, the previous decision is adverse to the favoured party, the judge disregards it without ceremony, and bases his decision on what he declares to be his view of the meaning of the text of the code. Under such a system the judge is in many cases enabled to give judgment for the plaintiff or the defendant at pleasure.

If the Legislature takes the reporting system in hand, there is a matter connected with it to which they may well turn their attention. The eagerness of modern judges to decide, if possible, every case upon some authority, or semblance of authority, proceeds, we believe, in part at least, from the fact of their being overworked. In the early part of the present century there were only twelve judges of the Common-law Courts at Westminster, and although three were added in 1830, the Welsh jurisdiction was then joined to the English, and the population of both countries has immensely increased since that time. What with the regular duties in open court, and scarcely less important duties at chambers, attendance at the House of Lords and the Central Criminal Court, on the Circuits, both winter and summer, &c., a modern judge has not time to sift every case as it deserves, and is compelled to decide many at a kind of haphazard. We do not say this in any disparagement of those eminent persons, who, indeed, do the best they can under the circumstances—the vice is in the system, and in its reformation the remedy must be sought.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Excuse me suggesting that the only darkness in this question arises from not correctly apprehending the doctrine of relation as applied to an act of bankruptcy. The result is, that from the date of the act of bankruptcy all property is divested out of the bankrupt. His acts convey no title. All persons acting under them are wrongdoers. The sheriff may return nulla bona. Assignees may sue in trover. (Balme v. Hatton, 9 Bing. 471; Garland v. Carlisle, 4 Scott, 587; Cheston v. Gibbs, 12 M. & W. 111). Of course I am speaking of the general doctrine, not of exceptions or protected transactions. This result is equally, if not a fortiori, the case where the supposed transaction or conveyance is an act of bankruptcy in itself. (Hall v. Wallace, 7 M. & W. 363).

Question, then, the necessity for registering a deed affected in this way. What deeds require registration? "Every deed by which a debtor conveys his estate and effects for the benefit of his creditors" (sect. 194). But by this deed (when treated as an act of bankruptcy) the debtor cannot be said to have conveyed his estate. The legal result of the adjudication is to pass the estate to the assignees in bankruptcy. The transaction is not within the words of the section at all.

The equity and reason of the case may not have much to do with the question; but what is the consideration for the advalorem bankruptcy stamp of 5s. per cent. imposed on registration by sect. 195? Evidently, the supposed benefit the creditors may receive from the control and direction of the bankruptcy court (sect. 197). But if the estate goes into bankruptcy, under an acquisition, the bankruptcy stamps and per-centages are all paid over again. Why, then, must this estate be taxed twice?

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
E. W.

[A fallacy which a Lord Chancellor has for the time raised to the dignity of law, and which has not yet been overruled, may not be unworthy of a second refutation. Our correspondent's argument is this—"All conveyances for the benefit of creditors must be registered; a deed which is void as against assignees in bankruptcy is not a conveyance, and is not required to be registered." The answer, in his own style, is—"A deed which is void is not a conveyance; therefore is not an act of bankruptcy." The true answer is this—The policy of the bankrupt law is to protect the creditors against certain acts of the debtor, among which is a fraudulent conveyance of his property. If the debtor make such a conveyance, the law will, at the instance of a debtor, declare that he has thereby become bankrupt, and the consequence of such decision is, that the conveyance is annulled. But the essential condition precedent to the adjudication is, that the conveyance be proved. If no conveyance is or can be proved, no possible injury to the creditors is or can be established; and the case of the petitioner wholly fails. A deed purporting to be a conveyance, but which cannot by any means be proved, is not a conveyance, and cannot, as a conveyance, be made the ground of any judicial determination. It is a nullity, not because it is an act of bankruptcy, but because no court can take notice of it for any purpose.]

TARIFF FOR COUNSEL'S FEES IN CANADA.

A BILL to settle counsel's fees by a tariff has been introduced into the Canadian Legislature. The last number of The Upper Canada Law Journal has the following remarks upon it:—

"Cheap law, like cheap whisky, is a curse to a people. This is a trite remark, often made, but not always understood. There is a fascination about litigation, which some men cannot resist. The cheaper the cost of litigation, the greater is the fascination. Much and needless litigation is only productive of ill-feeling, malice, and hatred.

"What so much discourages the litigious as a wholesome dread of law costs? It has always been found that in proportion as law costs are reduced, litigation increases. Jones is angry with his neighbour Brown, because the latter, in a hasty moment, called the former 'a scapegrace'; whereby Jones fell much in the estimation of his fellow-men; became sick, sore, and much pained in body and mind. Jones would like to sue Brown for this great wrong; but the prospect, in the event of failure, of having to pay costs to the amount of 100 dollars, puts a damper on his intentions. Reduce the costs from 100 dollars to 25 dollars, and Jones without doubt will have 'a slap' at Brown. Win or lose, the costs cannot be much; so that, with little or no hesitation, he proceeds to gratify his appetite for revenge. Jones and Brown are fair specimens of the genus 'homo' in matters of litigation.

"Is it not within the experience of us all, that the immediate effect of the increase of the jurisdiction of our division courts, was to increase litigation to such an extent, that suits increased by tens and hundreds? Two or three hundred suits at one court was no uncommon occurrence. Why was this? Because, before the change in the law, 200 out of the 300 suits could not be brought without the risk of county court costs, or about 40 dollars in each suit. The dread of such a consequence exercised its influence in pacifying the discontented, and led to compromises of a conciliatory kind, leaving men good neighbours instead of bitter enemies.

"Why is it that the judges of our superior courts are now so often called upon to try actions for malicious arrest, and malicious suing out process? It is because of the increased facilities afforded to men for resort to courts of law for the mere gratification of their angry passions. Most of such suits are for the malicious issue of attachments or other process out of the inferior courts. When once the seeds of discussion are sown, one suit leads to another, till happy homes are rendered desolate, and well-to-do men are brought to the brink of poverty, if not of insanity.

"The zealot for cheap law costs should ponder on things such as these; let him also consider how much peace between men is preserved by keeping up the respectability of the legal profession.

"It is a fact, that respectable lawyers, so far from encouraging litigation, do all they can to prevent it. It is no part of a respectable lawyer's duty 'to get his neighbours by their ears,' in order that he may profit by their misery. No respectable lawyer is guilty of such conduct. Better, then, to pay lawyers well for what they do, than to make it their interest to increase the number of suits by fostering litigation, in order to make their gains, notwithstanding the decrease of law costs, correspond with former receipts. Reduction of law costs might have the effect of driving respectable men out of the profession of the law into other callings, where their talents and their learning would be better required; but most assuredly their place would be supplied by vampires, who would prey upon the very vitals of the community, and whose number would be legion.

"No profession exercises so powerful an influence on the community as that of the law. The influence may be for good or for bad, according to the description of the men who wield it. A liberal and learned profession is at once the pride and the glory of England. The profession in Canada, so far, has not been under the mark. But tell the able advocate, whose life has been spent in the study of his profession, that he shall not be paid for his services beyond the compensation allowed to the 'negro minstrel,' or 'vendor of quack medicines,' and what will become of him? He will leave the profession in disgust, and his place will be taken by those whose moral faculties are more blunted, and appetite for plunder more craving. The result, in the language of the penny-a-liner, 'may be more easily imagined than described.'

"In England it has not yet been attempted, as a rule, to limit counsel fees. The labourer there is worthy of his hire. One man is more deserving than another. While Mr. Addlepate might be delighted to receive the magnificent fee of 10 dollars for pleading a case, Mr. Skilful would not accept the brief with less than 50. And perhaps, after all, the services of Mr. Addlepate at 10 dollars, would be dearer than those of Mr. Skilful at 50. Why, then, attempt to put both these men on the same footing? Why say that no greater counsel fee shall be taxed than 20 dollars? What is the consequence? It is this: it compels the suitor to employ mediocrity, or else pay the difference between the fee for mediocrity and talent out of his own pocket. This is not as it ought to be. The rule is, that the party in the wrong should pay the penalty of his position by paying the costs of litigation. But if the fees of litigation are so small that no man of talent or respectability will accept them, then the party in the right, who employs a man of talent or respectability, must pay his counsel out of his own pocket, and so be a loser, no matter what the result of the litigation.

"The principle of measuring a lawyer's fees by a tariff, and taxing them according to that tariff, is at best a doubtful one, and should not be stretched. Why should not the lawyer as well as the doctor be allowed to make his own bargain? There is no substantial difference between them. The one is employed to preserve and protect life; the other is employed to preserve and protect property. Each is a member of a liberal profession; each is licensed to practise that profession. There was a time when the Legislature of England endeavoured to fix the value of different commodities, and of the services of different classes of the community, by acts of Parliament. That time is almost past. The only relic of it, in the case of commodities, is that of the usury laws or fixed price of money; the only relic of it, in the case of individual classes of the community, is that of lawyers. It is absurd to attempt to fix by law that which, owing to surrounding circumstances and lapse of time, must necessarily fluctuate. If money, like any other commodity, exceeds the demand, it will be cheap. If lawyers, like any other class of labourers, exceed the demand, their services will be cheap. Such is the law of supply and demand. It constantly adjusts itself to surrounding circumstances. But the attempt to fix the price of a thing fluctuating in itself, is as illogical as an attempt to curb the wind.

"Lawyers must live. If they do not live strictly 'by the sweat of their brow,' they live by brain work—no less arduous. They are trained for a particular profession. For a consideration their services are offered to society. If the price for the services which the lawyer may at the instance of his fellow-men be called upon to perform, are fixed by act of Parliament, why should not the price of services which he receives? He must eat, drink, and live, like other men. If the shoemaker is not restrained by act of Parliament to a fixed price for his boots, why should the lawyer, who pays him for the boots? If the grocer, who supplies the lawyer with the necessities of life, is not limited to a tariff, why should the lawyer, who pays for the groceries? If the labourer, who cuts the lawyer's wood, may charge less or more for his services, according to circumstances, why should the lawyer who pays be limited in his receipts? A fee of 20 dollars for pleading a cause, when provisions and other necessities of life are cheap, may be a fair compensation, and yet no compensation at all if the price of provisions and other necessities of life increase three-fold. If the prices of the necessities of life increase three-fold, why should not the lawyer, whose expenditure is thereby increased, be allowed to make some corresponding increase in his charges? A tariff of fees for the services of lawyers is theoretically, if not practically, a rank absurdity. It is the remnant of absurdities which long since, as the statute book of England to this day testifies, have exploded."

PARLIAMENTARY INTELLIGENCE.

Mr. Bouverie has withdrawn his bill to prohibit the issue of writs for actions of debt in the superior courts for sums not exceeding 20*l*.

Sir J. Ferguson has brought in a bill to regulate the compensation for accidents.

The security from violence bill, introduced by Mr. Adderley, noticed ante, p. 103, has passed through committee, with considerable amendments, and after several divisions.

The bill, No. 1, to amend the law respecting the liability of innkeepers, noticed ante, p. 143, has been read a second time without a division; while No. 2, on the same subject, has been withdrawn.

BILL IN PROGRESS.

JURORS' REMUNERATION BILL.

A Bill for the Remuneration of Jurors in certain Cases.

(Prepared and brought in by Mr. Ayrton and Sir Fitzroy Kelly.)

Whereas it is expedient to remunerate jurors for their attendance to try issues respecting matters which have not arisen in the county from which such jurors are summoned: be it enacted &c. as follows:—

Section 1. Where a jury shall have been sworn to try any issue before a court or judge, and it shall appear to the court or judge that the cause of action or suit in such issue did not arise within the county from which such jury has been summoned, it shall be lawful for the court or judge to direct the person by whom or at whose instance such issue shall have been entered or brought on for trial in such county to pay to each of the jurors, in open court, before the jury are discharged, the sum of 7*s*. 6*d*., and the like sum of 7*s*. 6*d*. more for each day after the first during which the trial may continue; and any person failing to make such payment shall be deemed guilty of contempt of court.

2. The party paying such jury shall not have any further or other allowance for the same upon taxation of costs than he would have been entitled unto before the passing of this act, unless the court or judge shall, at or immediately after the trial of the issue, determine that the same could be more conveniently tried by such jury than by a jury of the county where the matters in question arose, unless such issue shall have been so tried by consent of both parties.

3. Every direction and determination of a court or judge under this act shall be final and conclusive.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

EASTER TERM, 26 VICT.—April 30, 1863.

This Court will, on Saturday, the 9th, and Monday, the 11th days of May next, hold sittings, and will proceed in disposing of the business then pending in the New Trial, Special, and Crown Papers, and will also give judgment in cases then standing for judgment.

By the Court.

JURIDICAL SOCIETY.—A meeting of this society was held at its rooms, 4, St. Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square, on Monday, the 4th instant, John Westlake, Esq., the chair; when Mr. F. S. Reilly read a paper on "The Provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act relating to Ships." A discussion ensued, in which Mr. C. Clerk, Mr. Hopwood, Mr. F. Nichols, Mr. W. Marshall, Mr. F. Lawrence, Mr. Hake, and Mr. Jackson took part.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Joseph Beaumont, Esq., to be Chief Justice for the colony of British Guiana; William Hackett, Esq., to be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of her Majesty's Forts and Settlements on the Gold Coast, and Assessor to the Native Chiefs within the protected territories near or adjacent to the said Forts and Settlements; and Thomas Lewis Ingram, Esq., to be her Majesty's Advocate and Police Magistrate for her Majesty's Settlement on the River Gambia.

The Right Hon. Sir William Erie, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, has appointed Peter Edward Hansell, Gent., of the city of Norwich, to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the city of Norwich, and county of the same city, also in and for the county of Norfolk.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MAY 16, 1863.

THERE have been of late some very interesting decisions upon the subject of ancient lights, and the difference of opinion which appears to exist among the judges upon some rather important points, shew that the law with reference to this easement is not in quite so settled a state as it ought to be.

Before examining the cases in which doubts have been raised, it may be well to state briefly the law relating to the easement of lights, so far as it is plain and undisputed.

Each of the owners of conterminous lands has a right to build at the extremity of his own ground, either a wall or a house, with or without windows, looking over the ground of his neighbour. Within twenty years, however, the neighbour has a right to build a wall or house, or make any other erection upon his own ground; nor can the person who first built complain that the access of light to his windows is thereby either wholly or partially excluded.

But if twenty years have elapsed since a person who has built a house on the extremity of his own land, and his neighbour has by no erection interfered with the access of light to the windows of such house, they acquire the character of what are termed ancient lights; and the owner of the land on which the house stands has a negative easement which enables him to prevent his neighbour from doing any act whereby such lights can be obstructed.

Suppose, however, that the owner of the house makes new lights, either by increasing the size of the old windows, adding a storey to his house, with new windows, or by extending the house laterally, with new windows overlooking a different part of his neighbour's ground, it is clear that if twenty years be allowed to elapse without any interference with these new or altered lights, they will acquire the character of ancient lights, and cannot be obstructed.

What right, then, has the owner of the land opposite, in the meantime, to prevent their acquiring that character, to the injury of his own property?

In the case of Renshaw v. Bean (16 Jur., part 1, p. 814), which was decided by Lord Campbell, C.J., and Patte-son, Coleridge, and Wightman, J.J., after a full argu-ment and consideration, it was laid down, that where the owner of the dominant tenement has opened new lights in such a way that the owner of the servient tenement cannot prevent the right to the new lights from being gained, as against him, without obstructing the old, he is allowed to ob-struct, and is excused from obstructing, the old lights, to such an extent, as is necessary for him to do so, in order to prevent the usurpation of the new lights. (See also Wilson v. Townend, 1 Drew. & S. 324, 330; 6 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1109; Hutchinson v. Copestake, 8 C. B., N. S., 102; 9 C. B., N. S., 863; and Binckes v. Pash, 11 C. B., N. S., 824). Assuming that a case has occurred in which the owner of the servient tenement is justified in erecting an obstruction to old and new lights, can he lawfully continue it after he has notice that the owner of the dominant tenement has closed up the new windows, and restored those altered, to their original position and dimensions?

Lord Campbell, in the case of Renshaw v. Bean, expressly lays it down, that where the owner of the servient tenement has obstructed ancient lights, which have been altered, the owner of the dominant tenement must be considered to lose the former right which he had; at all events, until he shall, by himself doing away with the excess, and restoring his windows to their former state, throw upon the defendant the necessity of so arranging his buildings as not to interfere with the admitted right.

This last point was actually raised in the case of Jones v. Tapping (11 C. B., N. S., 283; 8 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 333; aff. on app., 9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 462). There the plaintiff, being possessed of a house of three storeys, with a window in each, lowered and enlarged the windows on the first and second floors, and added two new storeys to the building, with windows therein. The altered windows on the first and second floors each occupied in part the space before occupied by the ancient windows, the window on the third floor remaining as it had always been. The defendant, in rebuilding his premises opposite, obstructed the whole of the plaintiff's windows, it being impossible (as found in a special case) to obstruct the new lights without at the same time obstructing the old ones. The plaintiff thereupon stopped up the new windows, and restored the old ones to their original state, and then required the defendant to remove the obstruction. It was held, by Byles and Keating, JJ., that the obstruction being lawful at the time of its erection, the defendant was not bound to remove it on the plaintiff's closing up his new and usurped lights. On the other hand it was held, by Erle, C. J., and Williams, J., that the continuance of the obstruction after the cause for its erection had been withdrawn was an unlawful act. The Court being equally divided, the junior judge, Keating, J., withdrew his opinion, and a decision was given in favour of the plaintiff, in order that an appeal might be brought to the Exchequer Chamber, where the decision of the Court below, in favour of the plaintiff, was affirmed by the majority of the Court, consisting of Wightman, Crompton, and Blackburn, JJ., and Bramwell, B., against the dissent of Pollock, C. B., and Martin, B. All the judges, however, both in the court below and in the Exchequer Chamber, except Blackburn, J., and Bramwell, B., proceeded upon the assumption that the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench in Renshaw v. Bean was sound law; the two latter judges, although it was not necessary for the decision of Jones v. Tapping to express any positive judicial opinion upon the point, in judgments which may be described as being rather long than luminous, attempted—but we think with signal want of success—to demonstrate that the decision in Renshaw v. Bean was altogether wrong. If, however, it were eventually held to be so, "it must," as Crompton, J., well observed, "follow inevitably that the party who has acquired, by the acquiescence or non-obstruction of his neighbour, a right to light through a single pane of glass, might open as many windows as he liked in a case like Jones v. Tapping, and the owner of the servient tenement could have no possible means of preventing the usurpation, as by the hypothesis, the new lights could not be obstructed without some interference with the old ones." A rule leading to results so unjust and absurd, never will, we may safely predict, be part of the law of the land. Putting the judgments of Blackburn, J., and Bramwell, B., out of the question, the other judges, who differed upon the point actually decided in Jones v. Tapping, do not seem to have disagreed so much upon a question of law as upon the inference to be drawn from certain facts. It was admitted by Crompton, J., that if there had been an intention on the part of the owner of the dominant tenement, manifested entirely and permanently to abandon his right to ancient lights, the defendant would have had a right to raise a permanent building, but that, as no such intention was manifested, his justification extended no further than to allow him to obstruct, whilst the occasion for so doing remained; and that when the occasion ceased, and the lights were restored to their original state, he, as occupier of the land, was liable for keeping an obstruction to the lights of his neighbour. With this reasoning Wightman, J., concurred. Pollock, C. B., on the other hand (with whom Martin, B., agreed), thought that where the claim to new lights is made by the erection of a permanent building, it is to be treated as an abandonment of the former limited right obtained by user or grant, and that the neighbour may erect a permanent obstruction. "If, then," he adds, "the party entitled to light, perceiving his error, pulls down his new house, and restores the building as it was before, with such lights only as had been granted or used, he cannot maintain an action simply because his neighbour does not thereupon pull down the obstruction; the obstruction was lawful when erected, and it seems contrary to justice and to all the analogies which the law of England furnishes, that a matter which was lawfully erected, shall become unlawful at the option, and by the act, of the party whose encroachment gave rise to and justified it."

Although the question is one of great difficulty, we are, on the whole, inclined to think the views of Erle, C. J., and Williams, J., in the Court of Common Pleas, and of Crompton and Wightman, JJ., in the Exchequer Chamber, are supported by the most weighty reasons; because the plaintiff, in Jones v. Tapping, by his acts, far from shewing an intention of abandoning any existing right to light, as he might have done, perhaps, by building a dead wall, was evidently endeavouring to obtain an increase of light. The defendant, therefore, although he had a right, according to the decision of Renshaw v. Bean, to obstruct the lights as altered, was only able to do so whilst they continued in a state not justified by the privilege which the owner had acquired by user. Upon their being reduced to that state, he was no longer justified in obstructing the easement which had never been abandoned; and in most, if not in all, such cases, the hardship inflicted on the owner of the servient tenement by the law, as laid down in the Exchequer Chamber, is not great, inasmuch as the purposes of obstruction may be answered by a temporary, as well as by a permanent, structure.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday, May 7.
The jurors remaneration bill was read a third time.

Monday, May 11.

DIVISION OF THE NORTHERN CIRCUIT.

Mr. Hadfield asked the Attorney-General whether the Government intended to make any and what alteration in the existing circuit arrangements; whether such arrangements would be completed before the next summer assizes, and would include a winter circuit, and in what places; and whether, on account of its extent and population, Yorkshire, like Lancashire, would have the privilege of assizes in three towns; and, particularly, whether the southern section of the county; comprising the wapentake of Strathforth and Tickhill, would be allowed the privilege of an assize town.

The Attorney-General said that alterations in the existing circuit arrangements had been for some time under the consideration of the Government, and that some alteration should take place could not be doubted, but the difficulty was to determine upon the particular arrangements. Various projects had been under consideration; and within the last few days a written statement had been received by the Lord Chancellor from the Lord Chief Justice and the two other chief judges, containing important suggestions on the subject. These suggestions demanded the fullest consideration. Time had not been afforded for that consideration, and it was hardly likely that any arrangements would be completed before the next summer assizes. In this stage of the inquiry, the other questions put by the hon. gentleman were rather premature.

On the motion of the Solicitor-General, the church building and new parishes acts amendment bill was read a second time, and referred to a select committee.

Tuesday, May 12.

SECURITY FROM VIOLENCE BILL.

On the motion that this bill be read a third time, Mr. G. Duff moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read a third time upon that day six months.

Mr. Cox seconded the amendment.

After a few words from Mr. Newdegate and Mr. Hibbert, the House divided:—

For the third reading	76
Against	18

Majority for the bill 58

The bill was then read a third time and passed.

Wednesday, May 13.

The judgments law amendment bill, introduced by Mr. Hadfield, was thrown out on the second reading by a majority of 43 to 23.

The railway accidents compensation bill, introduced by Mr. J. Ferguson, was thrown out on the second reading by a majority of 90 to 70.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.—A meeting of this society was held at its rooms, 3, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, on Monday, April 20, Mr. Serjeant Woolrych in the chair. Mr. A. Pulling stated, that the committee appointed to consider the resolutions which had been moved by Mr. Trower at a previous meeting on the subject of law reporting, had agreed to the following resolution:—"That it is desirable that a royal commission should issue to inquire and report what are the best means of improving the present system of law reporting; and that a deputation of this society should forthwith wait on the Lord Chancellor, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the Home Secretary, to lay the views of the society before them, and urge upon them the immediate adoption of this resolution." Mr. A. Pulling moved that the resolution of the committee be adopted by the society. Mr. T. Webster seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously. A discussion was held on Mr. Lefevre's paper, intitled "The Discipline of the Bar," in which Mr. H. Geale, Mr. Hastings, Mr. R. Stuart, Mr. T. Webster, Mr. W. S. Cookson, Mr. Montague Bere, Mr. Roher, Mr. Cust, and Mr. Lefevre took part. On the motion of Mr. Edgar, seconded by Mr. Hastings, a committee was nominated to consider and report on the subject treated of in Mr. Lefevre's paper.

THE ENGLISH CONSTITUTION. By Dr. EDWARD FISCHER. Translated from the German by R. JENERY SHEE.

"Dr. Fischer's work possesses an unusual merit. In his Preface he promises to make it not only instructive, but amusing; and he has kept his word. He has brought together a large quantity of material belonging to the romance of history; and when we state that his authorities range from Blackstone to Macaulay, with frequent dashes into the Annual Register, it will be seen that he has treated his subject conscientiously. . . . We have dealt with only a section of Dr. Fischer's work, and have done our best to shew how brimful of facts it is. We may add, that the other sections are equally interesting."—Athenæum

THE LAW of EVIDENCE as ADMINISTERED in ENGLAND and APPLIED to INDIA. By JOSEPH GOODEVE, Esq., of the Inner Temple and Lincoln's-inn, Barrister, Master of the Supreme Court of Calcutta, Member of the Senate of the University of Calcutta, and Lecturer on Law and Equity in the Presidency College.

"Mr. Goodeve's book is professedly and really a Treatise on the English Law of Evidence, shewing in addition the adaptation of that law to oriental exigencies. It abounds in shrewd remarks, and is evidently the result of comprehensive study, close observation, and clear reasoning. In India, the insertion of numerous references would have been rather an incumbrance than a benefit; and while we can confidently recommend the work to the young student of principles at home, we have little doubt that it will become a leading book of practice in the country for which it is especially intended."—Solicitors' Journal, July 5, 1862.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MAY 23, 1863.

INTERNATIONAL law is in a state far from desirable. The general ignorance of it throughout the community is great; and even among statesmen and legislators its principles are constantly misunderstood, and more frequently misapplied. This is not to be wondered at when we see how international jurists are divided among themselves, not merely on particular questions, but even on the very elements of the science. Last year, we noticed a paper read at the Juridical Society by Professor Katchenovsky, of the University of Kharkow, in Russia (8 Jur., N. S., part 2, pp. 249, 456), where the author reviews the state of international law in the principal countries in Europe, and shews that there are unhappily two schools of it, which may be designated the philosophical and the positive schools;—the former of which base that law on philosophical principles alone, while the latter assert that it is solely to be found in conventions, treaties, and customs. The fathers of the science, Grotius, Suarez, Pufendorf, Vattel, &c., avail themselves indifferently of both; and almost all good authors on international law, ancient and modern, including Wheaton and the Queen's Advocate, admit, in words at least, the justice of this course. The absurdity of the schism may be illustrated by supposing two schools to spring up among English lawyers, one maintaining that our jurisprudence consists solely of the common law, and the other solely of the statute law.

In the present unfortunate state of international jurisprudence, we feel grateful for anything which contributes to explain, illustrate, or popularise it. There is now lying before us a small volume, entitled "Letters by Historicus on some Questions of International Law. Reprinted from The Times, with considerable Additions.—London and Cambridge: Macmillan & Co. 1863." The appearance of these letters is obviously owing to the civil war now raging in America, and the several important questions which have sprung out of it, some of them of a nature to threaten the peace of this country. Many of these letters have appeared in The Times, where they have, doubtless, been perused by several of our readers, but there are some new ones, as will be seen from the following Table of Contents:—

"I. Three Letters on 'Recognition.'"

- (1). The International Doctrine of Recognition.
- (2). The Texan Precedent.
- (3). The Edinburgh Review on Recognition.

II. A Letter on the Perils of Intervention.

III. Some Remarks on a Work of M. Hautefeuille, entitled 'Des Droits et des Devoirs des Nations Neutres.'

IV. Two Letters on the Law of Blockade:

- (1). England and Paper Blockades.
- (2). Blockades by Cruising Squadrons.
- (3). Note on the Origin of the Continental System.

V. Two Letters on Neutral Trade in Contraband of War:

- (1). Neutral Trade in Contraband of War.
- (2). Insurance on Contraband Voyages.

VI. Belligerent Violation of Neutral Rights.

VII. The Foreign Enlistment Act.

VIII. A Letter on the Right of Search.

IX. Some Extracts from Letters published in the Winter of 1862 on the Affair of 'The Trent,' on Mr. Seward's Dispatch:

- (1). A Letter on the Nature and Essential Requisites of Contraband of War.
- (2). A further Letter on the same subject.
- (3). Extract from a Letter on Mr. C. Sumner's Speech on the Surrender of Messrs. Slidell and Mason.

X. A Paper on the Territoriality of the Merchant Vessel."

It is not our intention, even did our space permit, to examine these letters in detail, or to express our concurrence in all that is to be found in them. Taken as a whole, they form a collection well deserving perusal, and evidently the production of an able and well-informed mind. They have the additional recommendation, that the author professes to treat the questions before him, not as the politician, but as the jurist, who he truly observes (p. 162), "Should know no distinction between the Trojan and the Tyrian camps"—a principle which we wish he had in some places carried a little farther.

The following extracts will give a general idea of the nature of the volume and the style of the author:—

In his Preface, Historicus makes the following most just observations on the subject of international law:—"The text-writer on international law assumes a noble task, but he at the same time accepts a grave responsibility. His speculations, if unsound, and his maxims, if unjustifiable, must too often be refuted by the sword. They furnish pretexts sometimes for unjust demands, at others for unrighteous refusals. Those who assume the authority of publicists exercise, in some sort, the judicial functions of life and death. . . . It is the immortal glory of Grotius, through a new dispensation of international right, to have evangelised the society of nations brutalised by a licentious carnival of force. It has been the shame of others, to have degraded the palladium of law into the minister of the temporary passions of Governments, and the servile instrument of the interests of States. . . . On most questions of international law, the student has still to make for himself his own text-book; to extract from scattered documents the records of historical precedents; to deduce from judicial decisions the principles of established law; and, what is still more difficult, to distinguish, in contradictory text-writers, the doctrines which are founded on reason and law from those which have their birth in inveterate prejudice or empty speculation. It is from these difficulties that ill-informed and shallow reasoners have been induced to question altogether the existence of the principles of international law. Yet this idea is about as reasonable as if a man, who had neither the instruments nor the knowledge requisite to take an observation, should dispute the possibility of a science of astronomy."

In the first letter, intitled "The International Doctrine of Recognition" (pp. 9, 10), we find the following:—"As far, then, as any practical rule can be deduced from historical examples, it seems to be this—When a sovereign State, from exhaustion or any other cause, has virtually and substantially abandoned the struggle for supremacy, it has no right to complain if a foreign State treat the independence of its former subjects as de facto established; nor can it prolong its sovereignty by a mere paper assertion of right. When, on the other hand, the contest is not absolutely or permanently decided, a recognition of the inchoate independence of the insurgents by a foreign State is a hostile act towards the sovereign State, which the latter is entitled to resent as a breach of neutrality and friendship. The true rule is that laid down in the old distich. Rebellion, until it has succeeded, is treason; when it is successful, it becomes independence. And thus, the only real test of independence is final success."

In the first letter on "Neutral Trade in Contraband of War" (pp. 121, 122)—"We have the misfortune to live in days when, in the name of liberalism, philanthropy, and civilisation, we are invited to upset the whole fabric of international law, which the reason of jurists has designed, and the usage of nations has built up, and to rear upon its ruins the trumpery edifice of a shallow caprice. It is the old story of that pretentious philosophy, which, by a recurrence to first principles, attempted, with so little success, to operate the regeneration of mankind. I would that we had yet among us the multitudinous eloquence of Burke, or the poignant wit of Canning, to do condign justice upon this presumptuous sciolism. . . . I can concede to M. Hautefeuille everything except the title to originality. The leading principle on which his well-known work is constructed has been, in fact, anticipated by a dispatch to Jefferson in 1793. 'I do not recollect,' says M. Genet, the celebrated plenipotentiary of the French Republic, 'what the worn-out writings of Grotius, Pufendorf, and Vattel, say on the subject. I thank God I have forgotten what these mercenary jurisprudents have written on the rights of nations at a period when they were all enchained. The rights of man are inclosed in my breast with the source of life.' We pause to remark, that somewhat similar sentiments were uttered by Mr. Cobden, in his speech at Manchester last autumn. (See The Standard of the 25th October, 1862).

Historicus properly avoids giving any opinion on the disputed question of The Alabama. In some of the letters before us, however (4, 5, 6, 7), he fully goes into the principles by which that and all similar questions should be decided. Upon the whole, our impression is, that, on this subject, Historicus extends the liberty of the neutral too far: but we invite our readers to peruse his letters, and judge for themselves. We, however, fully subscribe to the justice of the following passage (p. 159):—"The real grounds on which the neutral is bound to do anything at all in the matter are, first and principally, in order to protect himself from that sort of retaliation which, by the law of impartiality, he would be obliged to concede to the injured belligerent against the aggressor; and, secondly, though in a less degree, that he may clear himself from the suspicion of a fraudulent and unreal neutrality. A tame and spiritless submission to infractions of his rights would justly expose the neutral to the imputation of connivance with the party at whose hands they were sustained. In such a case, the injured belligerent would be justly entitled to regard the professing neutral as, in reality, the ally of his foe. What circumstances are sufficient to justify such an inference of connivance is, no doubt, a difficult question of fact. It is also in the highest degree the interest of the neutral to prevent that being done by one belligerent, which he must in turn concede to the other, and which would, in the end, turn the neutral territory into the belligerent battle-field."

In several of these letters, Historicus is very severe on M. Hautefeuille. Thus, at p. 175, he says, "His chapter on the right of visitation and of search is one of the most colossal monuments of nonsense which it is possible to find in the annals of jurisprudence. He founds his whole theory on the basis of an assumption, that the right of visitation is solely a creation of treaties, and that it has no existence in the general law of nations. This monstrous hypothesis is borrowed, if I remember right, from the tract of Schlegel, who, as Mr. Ward says, 'augmented the sophistry of Hübnér.'" And at pp. 56, 57, "This same amiable object of combining an European confederation against England, is avowed in a still more distinct manner by M. Hautefeuille. . . . He is mistaken in supposing that love of his own country is the 'sentiment la plus vivace' which animates his breast. In his soul there is another still more living principle, in the hatred of one other nation. If M. Hautefeuille is a 'citoyen de l'univers,' he inhabits that terrestrial globe which the first Napoleon endeavoured to create, in which the unsymmetrical contour of the British Isles was to be blotted out," &c. We have alluded to these passages, not with the view of expressing either approbation or condemnation of them, but because M. Hautefeuille is a writer whose works are frequently quoted, and may, therefore, be supposed to have some influence for good or evil on his generation; and it may, therefore, be well to notice in what degree of estimation he and some other continental writers are held by an able author like that before us.

EXAMINATIONS AT THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

INTERMEDIATE EXAMINATION.

THE Examiners reported that the following gentlemen, whose names are arranged in alphabetical order, have passed the intermediate examination with distinction:—

Edward Bythway, aged twenty-two, articled to Mr. John Bury, of Manchester; and Messrs. Cunliffe & Leaf, of Manchester.

Thomas Mountain, aged eighteen, articled to Messrs. Grange & Winttingham, of Great Grimsby.

Louis Philip Vincent, aged twenty, articled to Messrs. Chilton, Burton, Yeates, & Hart, of London.

The number of candidates examined in this Term was thirty-five; of these thirty-three were passed and two postponed.

By order of the Council,

E. W. WILLIAMSON, Secretary.

Law Society's Hall, Chancery-lane,
London, May 7, 1863.

FINAL EXAMINATION.

AT the examination of candidates for admission on the roll of attorneys and solicitors of the Superior Courts, the Examiners recommended the following gentlemen, under the age of twenty-six, as being entitled to honorary distinction:—

1. James Popham Ogle, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. Ogle, of London; and Messrs. Hardisty & Rhodes, of London.

3. Thomas Dallow, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Pinchard & Shelton, of Wolverhampton; and Mr. Edwin Low, of London.

3. John Hardy Coulson, aged twenty-four, who served his clerkship to Mr. Charles Marfleet Barron Veal, of Great Grimsby.

4. Robert Nicholson, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Bardswell, Littledale, & Bardswell, of Liverpool; Messrs. Littledale, Ridley, & Bardswell, of Liverpool; and Messrs. Chester & Urquhart, of London.

The Council of the Incorporated Law Society have accordingly awarded the following prizes of books:—

To Mr. Ogle, the prize of the Hon. Society of Clifford's-inn.

To Mr. Dallow, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society.

To Mr. Coulson, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society.

To Mr. Nicholson, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society.

Alfred Caddick, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. Elisha Caddick, of West Bromwich; Mr. Edward Caddick, of West Bromwich; and Messrs. Mackeson & Goldring, of London.

Arthur Footner, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. George Bright Footner, of Romsey; and Messrs. Park & W. B. Nelson, of London.

Alfred Crick Freeman, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Messrs. John & Wm. Crick, of Maldon; and Andrew Storey, of London.

William James Hutton, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. Thomas Harrison, of Kendal; and Mr. Thomas Johnston, of London.

Samuel Herbert Lewin, B. A., aged twenty-four, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Gregory & Rowcliffes, of London.

Charles Amos Lister, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Hulton & Brett, of Salford.

Hervey Edward Murly, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. Geo. Bullock Murly, of Langport; and Messrs. Flux & Argles, of London.

George James Nutt, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Deacon & Taylor, of Peterborough; and Mr. John Steer Hincks, of London.

John Slade the younger, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. Geo. Penkivil Slade; Mr. John Slade, of Yeovil; and Messrs. Gregory & Rowcliffes, of London.

Edward Orford Smith, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Scudamore & Brennan, of Maidstone; and Messrs. Palmer, Palmer, & Bull, of London.

Harry Snow, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Mr. John Wm. Danby, of Lincoln; and Messrs. Hawkins, Bloxam, & Hawkins, of London.

The Council have accordingly awarded them certificates of merit.

The Examiners have further announced to the following candidates that their answers to the questions at the examination were highly satisfactory, and would have entitled them to prizes or certificates of merit if they had been under the age of twenty-six:—

1. William Bowles Barrett, aged thirty, who served his clerkship to Mr. George Andrews, of Weymouth.

2. William Wallis, aged twenty-seven, who served his clerkship to Mr. Wm. Newton, of Newark.

The number of candidates examined in this term was eighty-eight; of these seventy-one were passed and seventeen postponed.

By order of the Council,

E. W. WILLIAMSON, Secretary.

Law Society's Hall, Chancery-lane,
London, May 7, 1863.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The English Constitution, by Dr. Edward Fischel. Translated from the Second German Edition, by Richard Jemery Shee, of the Inner Temple. Post8vo., pp. 604.—Bosworth & Harrison.

The Institution of the English Government: being an Account of the Constitution, Powers, and Procedure of its Legislative, Judicial, and Administrative Departments; with copious References to Ancient and Modern Authorities. By Homersham Cox, M.A., Barrister-at-Law, Author of "The British Commonwealth." 8vo., pp. 849.—H. Sweet.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday, May 12.

Mr. Cox obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act, 1856.

Thursday, May 14.

Mr. Hunt obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the law relating to election petitions.

Mr. Butt obtained leave to introduce bills to amend the law relating to giving security for costs, and to make better provision for the enforcement in England and Ireland of decrees and orders of the Courts of Chancery, Probate, and Divorce.

Monday, May 18.

NEW COURTS OF JUSTICE.

Mr. A. Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether her Majesty's Government had arrived at any decision as to the course to be adopted with reference to the building and concentration of courts of justice, and the sites to be chosen for that purpose; and if so, whether he would state what measures it had been determined to adopt.

Sir G. Grey said, it was the intention of his right hon. friend the First Commissioner of Works to ask for leave to bring in a bill for the appropriation of certain funds for the purpose referred to in the question of the right hon. gentleman. If he succeeded in carrying that bill, a measure would be brought in next session to enable the Government to effect what was desired in relation to the courts of justice. Such a bill as the latter could not be brought in this session, as the necessary Standing Orders had not been complied with.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.—A meeting of this society was held at its rooms, 3, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, on Monday, May 4, J. E. Johnson, Esq., in the chair. Mr. Pulling then made the following report of the special committee of the Law Amendment Society on law reporting:—"The deputation appointed by the society had the honour of an interview with the Lord Chancellor on the 21st April, and laid before his Lordship the views of the society as to an improved system of law reporting contained in the reports of the two committees appointed in 1849 and 1853, intimating that the subject of the important further question of consolidation of the law contained in the law reports had not yet been sufficiently considered by the society. His Lordship received the deputation in a very courteous manner, but being summoned to attend to his parliamentary duties, his Lordship intimated that he should deem the meeting only a preliminary one; and having subsequently requested the deputation again to meet him, the deputation had the honour of a second interview, when his Lordship stated that he was fully impressed with the evils of the present system of law reporting, but was not at present prepared to take any definite course with the view of effecting the remedy, which, it was intimated, rested so very much with the Profession itself. His Lordship, however, made some very valuable suggestions for the consideration of the society in dealing with the whole question." On the motion of Mr. Pulling, the subject was referred to the special committee for further consideration. The motion was seconded by Mr. Lenton Pulling, and carried. Mr. Hastings read the report of the special committee on the "Treatment and Punishment of Convicted Criminals," and moved that the report be adopted and printed. Mr. Torrens seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously. Mr. F. Hill, Mr. Akroyd, Mr. H. G. Allen, Mr. Lenton Pulling, Mr. G. Harry Palmer, Mr. Roher, and the Chairman spoke on the motion.

In the parliamentary debate on disqualified witnesses (House of Commons, Feb. 12, 1861), referring to the case of Maden v. Calmack, Sir G. C. Lewis said, "He would read from Starkie on Evidence, which was known to be a standard work upon the subject, a statement of the law as applicable to the case (vide Examination as to Religious Belief, pp. 115, 116). That is a clear statement of the rule of law upon the subject."

"It is remarkable for a rare combination of conciseness and clearness in the composition, which have recommended it to magistrates who have not been educated as lawyers, and to whom, therefore, the books written for the use of lawyers are often obscure by reason of their technicalities. The present editors have preserved this characteristic of Mr. Stone's volume in their own abundant additions to it."—Law Times.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MAY 30, 1863.

THE reporting question continues to occupy the attention of the Profession. In former numbers (ante, pp. 159 and 167), we endeavoured to shew the root of the evil, and point out some of the delusions prevalent on the subject. We now proceed to give a sketch of the present system of reporting.

Reporters are divided into two classes, regular and irregular. The former are the recognised reporters of a tribunal: and in each of the Courts at Westminster an unbroken, or nearly unbroken, series of such reporters has existed since the beginning of the Term Reports in 1785. Occasionally contemporary series have existed in the same Court, but this practice has now entirely disappeared. The reporters of whom we are speaking stand in a very different position from all other reporters. Their reports are the authorised histories, and, indeed, almost the records, of what has been done by their respective tribunals; and as the authority of decisions is not destroyed by their antiquity, those histories, or quasi records, are destined to a long term of existence, and may, for aught we know, endure "to the last syllable of recorded time."

It is, therefore, the bounden duty of this class of reporters to strive after the highest perfection in their vocation;—by ascertaining with the utmost care the precise facts of each case they report, by carefully verifying all the books cited in it, by omitting no argument used by the Bar, or dictum enunciated by the Bench, and giving to the world the language of the judges with that accuracy and precision which is due to those whose words are authority, and the misrepresentation of which is so injurious. And although needless delay in the publication of reports is at all times to be deprecated, still, among this class of reporters, dispatch is a secondary consideration. The other class to which we shall presently advert, stand in a very different position, and enjoy peculiar advantages in this respect; and no regular reporter, who values his own reputation, either present or posthumous, or, what is of far greater importance, the reputation, present and posthumous, of the judges of the court to which he belongs, will commit himself to any contest for priority of publication;—a race in which he is of necessity over-weighted, and must inevitably lose.

The reporters denominated "irregular" have sprung into existence in modern times, and are now very numerous. They are as follows:—The Law Journal, commenced in 1822; the Jurist, in 1837; the Law Times, 1843; the Weekly Reporter, 1852; and the New Reports, 1862. Besides these there are others devoted to matters of a special nature; such as the Justice of the Peace, established many years ago for the purpose of reporting cases interesting to the magistracy, &c.

This class of reports has arisen from the necessity of supplying the Profession with short and cheap accounts of important cases for immediate use, without waiting for the regular reports, which, partly from the necessity of the thing, and partly through the fault of the reporters, have occasionally fallen much into arrear, as well as become incident to the evils attendant on all monopolies, deterioration and oppression. But from the very nature of these irregular reports, they are necessarily drawn up with less care, and without the same sense of responsibility. And they differ considerably among themselves, not only in point of merit, but in the system they pursue. Some are a kind of registry of every case that comes before the tribunal; others confine themselves to noticing such as involve some point of law; while others, again, proceed on the principle of reporting those cases only which are really of consequence to the Profession, and by giving their undivided attention to them, rendering their reports full and trustworthy.

But whatever the form of our reports, the Profession at the present moment declare themselves dissatisfied with them all, denounce the evils in the reporting system, and call loudly for some plan for reducing the number of contemporaneous reports, and establishing a series, which shall be executed in first-class style, containing neither too many cases, nor too few; the cases reported at exactly the proper length, neither too long nor too short, the whole to appear weekly, or at some other short period, and the work to be purchased at some price so low that it may almost, and certainly when taken into consideration with what is expected from the reports, be designated an old song.

It is easy to talk of all this, but experience of the past does not promise well for its performance. Several of the reports now existing were started on the promise to supply such a series; and, indeed, some which appear at the end of each week, undertake to bring down the reports to the preceding Wednesday. Promises of this kind are, however, never fulfilled; and for the invincible reason, that the thing promised is an impossibility, as every person acquainted with the subject is perfectly aware, and as we now proceed to shew.

It is a common, though vulgar and groundless, error to suppose that the labour of a reporter consists, wholly, or even perhaps principally, in making notes in court. Having made his notes, ever so perfectly, much still remains to be done. First, he has to determine whether the case is worth reporting. It may be underserving of a report for many reasons:—1. The Court may have disposed of it on the facts, without giving an opinion on any point of law. 2. If otherwise, still the decision may be avowedly based on the authority of some cited case, expressly in point, and the soundness of which has never been questioned. The duty of discriminating in this respect is sadly neglected by most of our reporters at the present day, and some who are paid by length openly avow that neglect. 3. The case may, indeed, be a decision on a point of law, but so obvious, that to report it would be trifling with the understandings of his readers.

Suppose, however, in the second place, that the reporter determines that the case ought to be reported, and proceeds to draw it up accordingly. Here, he must, first of all, read his notes carefully through (and a single reading is rarely sufficient), then write down in a succinct and readable form, the substance of a case, that perhaps occupied for hours; and then append to the whole a head note or side note, in which the exact points decided are extracted from a rudis indigestaque moles of facts, contradictory assertions of counsel, argument, and decision. For this purpose he must verify (and, indeed, sometimes find out, as judges and counsel not unfrequently give them by allusion only) the various authorities and statutes relied on, and exercise a discretion, often a difficult one, of determining whether they shall merely be referred to by name, or the points decided in them set out, or perhaps even the extracts from them that may have been read by the Bar or the Bench. Now, as no member of the Bar has in his chambers all the books that may be cited in the course of a legal argument, the reporter naturally seeks in the library of his Inn or Court those in which he is deficient. Few have access to more than one or two of these libraries, all of which close at four or five P. M. Besides, not one of them is complete, especially as regards foreign authorities, and there are some works not to be found in any of them; in which event the reporter resorts to the British Museum, or some similar place, or to the kindness of friends, at a sacrifice of time, and perhaps without success.

Few cases of any importance can be reported without access to the papers in the cause, and here the reporter is often exposed to delay and disappointment. The officers of the Court frequently require them for official purposes; the attorneys in the cause frequently require them for the purpose of the taxation of costs; sometimes the reporter finds that they have been returned to the agent in the country; and sometimes his application for them meets with an evasive, dilatory, or discourteous answer. In justice to the second branch of the Profession, it must be acknowledged that instances of the latter are rare, and that their conduct in lending papers is for the most part in the highest degree obliging and commendable; at the same time, it is not unimportant to observe that they have become more chary in this respect of late, in consequence, no doubt, of the great increase in the number of reporters.

Nor is this all. It is well known that in important cases, with few exceptions, and in almost all in which the Court takes time to consider, the judgments are committed to writing, and delivered to the regular reporters. Formerly the use of those documents was restricted to them, but this monopoly has been justly abolished. Still the regular reporters are responsible for those judgments to the Bench, and therefore very properly never allow any out of their possession until a copy has been made—a matter which must necessarily require time. Besides, as there are so many sets of reports, it may happen that a judgment is required in several places at the same moment, and it, therefore, becomes necessary to determine which reporter is entitled to precedence, either on the ground of standing or prior application.

Lastly, we recommend every member of the Bar, who is anxious to understand the reporting question, to inquire into the way in which reporters are remunerated. Perhaps he may not be able to ascertain this directly, or even accurately; but, in any event, we invite him calmly to consider, whether what is demanded by the Profession can be procured at the existing scale of remuneration. "The labourer is worthy of his hire," applies to reporters as well as to others. Many persons will doubtless be found who, through ignorance of the nature of the task, or from interested motives, will promise to supply such reports such as it is the fashion to expect; but if we have, in the preceding sentences, correctly described the duties and difficulties of genuine reporting, the thing is impracticable, and, were it otherwise, would be in the highest degree illiberal and ungenerous to exact.

"Duo sunt lumina mundi," said our ancestors, "ratio and auctoritas;" but the great object of the present day seems to be to extinguish the first, and involve the second in mist and darkness. Half-a-score of cases solemnly argued, deliberately decided, and faithfully reported, would settle the law on almost any subject, at least sufficiently to enable a counsel, with anything exceeding a mere elementary knowledge of his Profession, to understand and advise upon it. But how stands the practice? The same point is reported over and over again, in the most perfect disregard of all previous reports, and often in a slovenly and careless way—so as to create doubts on matters clear in themselves. We proceed to give one strong instance of this, and will then conclude our observations, too long perhaps already. The celebrated Statute of Frauds and Perjuries, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, was passed in 1676, and, it might fairly be supposed, had been fully construed in the eighty years that elapsed from that time to 1756, when Harrison's Index begins. It is not easy to say how many cases involving the construction of the statute are to be found in that book, seeing that they are scattered over different parts of it; but, beyond all question, they are to be counted by hundreds, if not thousands; yet, in the twenty years that have elapsed since the conclusion of that work, cases have continued to be reported on the subject, as if the statute had only passed yesterday. Surely all this calls for remedy.

Review.

Woodfall's Law of Landlord and Tenant; with a Full Collection of Precedents, and Forms of Procedure. The Eighth Edition, by W. R. COLE, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

[H. Sweet; W. Maxwell; and V. & R. Stevens, Sons, & Haynes.]

MORE than sixty years ago a barrister of the name of Woodfall published a treatise on the law of landlord and tenant; a treatise which, although small when compared with modern works (swollen as they are with accumulated decisions, and voluminous and irritatingly perplexing acts of Parliament) was so good, and so thoroughly up to the requirements of the day, that within twenty years he issued six editions of his book to the public. A seventh edition was then written by Mr. Pratt; and about the same time, or soon afterwards, the same task was undertaken by Mr. Harrison, who, while he retained the name of Woodfall, and professedly based his work on the older book, made a complete alteration both in form and material. Again: so great was the success of the work in its new form, that in a short space of time Mr. Harrison issued three editions, which he renumbered from his own first effort. Mr. Wollaston then took up the work, and in addition to the name of Woodfall, retained Mr. Harrison's name and numbering, and adhered to his new arrangement of the subject, feeling (as he stated in his Preface) bound to take that course, in consequence of the approbation exhibited by the rapid sale of the previous editions. He also issued three editions, Mr. Horn issued another in the same spirit, and now that labour has been undertaken by Mr. Cole (already known to the Profession as an author, by his work on Ejectment), who has, however, altogether dropped the name of Harrison. And thus we have now before us a work, which, although called the eighth edition of Woodfall, is, in fact, the eighth of Woodfall by Harrison, and fifteenth of Woodfall. And notwithstanding the proverbial vanity of authors, we can imagine that Mr. Woodfall, if he had the opportunity, would be somewhat surprised at the retention of his name, at this period of time, in connexion with a book so utterly different to his own treatise in bulk, matter, and arrangement. Indeed, as a matter of vanity, we are not quite sure whether, in spite of the compliment, Mr. Woodfall might not feel himself, to a certain extent, injured; for whilst he could not fail to be astonished at the enormous pile of information which has gradually been accumulated in the modern works, he would, we fancy, be somewhat dissatisfied with their style and arrangement, and with good reason consider his own greatly superior. For ourselves, we certainly think the old arrangement better than the new; and if any of our readers will take the trouble to compare the table of contents of Mr. Woodfall's own work (or that of Mr. Coote's independent treatise, which is somewhat similar) with that of the present edition, we doubt not that they will agree with us, that however great the improvement that has been attained in the bulk and variety of the information, the arrangement has deteriorated, and become less scientific and perspicuous. With this matter Mr. Cole has not mingled himself; he has taken the book exactly as it has been handed down to him from previous editors, and, without altering its form, incorporated under the appropriate headings the new law, and such additional information as seemed to him to be required. This being so, our task of reviewing is much simplified; we have neither to state the method of arrangement of a book so long and so well known, nor to discuss its practical utility and its value, so long recognised; but we have only to deal with the question of how Mr. Cole has discharged his duty of bringing this standard work down to the present state of the law.

One fault which we have to find with Mr. Cole's work, is the method he has adopted in many instances, where the old law has been altered by late statutes. Instead of beginning with the old law (either in its integrity, or as far as it now holds good), and then citing the recent statute, he baldly prefixes the modern enactments to the old materials of the former editions, altered by such emendations and additions as seem requisite to him, as will be seen by reference to chap. 1, ss. 4, 5, and 17; chap. 6, s. 7; and chap. 14, s. 3 (b). This is writing a text-book in the form of an annotated edition of the statutes, and is a style of composition which we cannot but deprecate in any legal treatise.

Sometimes also, the arrangement of the materials is unsatisfactory. Thus, at chap. 1, s. 17, we have, under the title of "Leases by trustees of settled estates," law relating by no means especially to such persons, and law relating exclusively to another branch of this chapter, viz. the granting of leases by persons acting under powers. Again: we have the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120, s. 34, cited only at p. 43, under the title of "Leases by husband and wife," although it applies to several previous sections of the chapter. The contents of chap. 6, s. 10, seem entirely out of place. A good deal of the law which is to be found under the head of "Forfeiture," p. 270, would be more appropriately placed under the title "Disclaimer," p. 310. The law as to eviction is not kept properly together. In book 2, at pp. 474, 484, and 513, we have sections on the remedies for breach of contract, waste, and injuries respecting fixtures, which, according to the scheme of the book, should be, in book 3. And we find the law, as to injunction at law, under the heading of "Proceedings in equity."

Some portions of the subject are also, to our mind, not sufficiently and properly discussed. Thus, at p. 44, it is laid down, that if a husband lease his wife's land by deed, the term is not void on his death, but only voidable; without any reference to 2 Wms. Saund. 180 a, where the subject is elaborately discussed, and shewn not to be quite clear. Under the heading of "Leases to assignees of bankrupts," it is merely laid down, that the assignees cannot become lessees of the bankrupt's estate, without any reference to the law as to their acceptance of the bankrupt's leaseholds, which, though properly discussed in another place, should, at least, be referred to. The law, as to what Mr. Cole calls the exceptions to the general rule, that parol evidence is not admissible to vary deeds, as to when a servant becomes a tenant or not, and as to covenants running with the land and the reversion, is not discussed in the manner we should wish. It is stated at p. 177, that a sub-demise, or assignment by a tenant at will, without notice to his landlord, does not determine the will, which, though in one sense correct, is obviously liable to be misconstrued when stated in this way; as is also the proposition (p. 228), "that an administrator cannot bind the testator's estate by any assent to the application or disposal thereof before letters of administration, which do not relate back." Again: the effects of an execution are not properly discussed; among other defects, the question of equitable terms (so fully discussed in 2 Wms. Saund. 11 a, and the case of Gore v. Bowser, 24 L. J., Ch., 316, 440) being omitted, and the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, cited, without any reference to the rest of the law. The law as to the merger of estates in a man's own right and in autre droit is badly treated. As this subject is in a state of confusion, the best method of dealing with it would have been to take the law from the judgment in Jones v. Davies, where the matter is fully discussed; and, at all events, Sir E. Coke's dictum should not be inserted, when Lord St. Leonards, in his work on Vendors and Purchasers, and Bramwell, B., in Jones v. Davies, have shewn that it is not law. The section as to assessed taxes contains nothing to speak of, and the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 107, is cited, whilst that act only applies to Ireland; indeed, the whole chapter as to "rates, taxes, and assessments," is not what it should be. In the discussion of contracts for quiet enjoyment, it is not explained what is a breach of an implied covenant in that behalf, though breaches of express covenants are discussed at some length. And when stating that a smoky or noisy nuisance cannot be actionable to the reversioner, it would have been well to say that this is so, even if the tenants give less rent or notice to quit, or the property would sell for less in consequence of the nuisance.

In a few instances we have observed what we believe to be bad law. At p. 90, Mr. Cole lays down that, though generally speaking, a right of way cannot pass under the word "appurtenances," yet a way of necessity may so pass. This is erroneous; where the way is one of necessity, no words are necessary, and where it is not such, and the question arises as to whether the word "appurtenances" is sufficient to pass it, that word is to be construed by the contents of the deed. If the context shews that it was meant to pass, it will pass; if there is nothing to shew this, it will not. At p. 176, it is said, that if a tenant for years holds over, he is tenant at will till payment and acceptance of rent. This is not so; he is tenant on sufferance. Com. Dig., tit. "Estate." I. 1, cited by Mr. Cole as an authority, is directly against him; Clayton v. Blakey, also cited, is not in point, the question there being, whether a man holding under a void agreement was tenant at will or for years; and the very definition of a tenant on sufferance, which will be found at p. 179, shews this, "a tenant on sufferance is one who enters by lawful demise or title, and afterwards wrongfully continues in possession without the assent or dissent of the person next entitled." Mr. Cole has either confused the case with that of a tenant, who, having no previous title or rightful occupation, is allowed to enter under a void lease or mere agreement, or he has forgotten the necessity of an assent by the landlord. We also think the proposition that, where the husband of a tenant in fee lets in his own name, the lessee is estopped from denying his title on the death of the wife, is erroneous. It is true that this doctrine is countenanced by what is reported to have been said by some learned judges in Hove v. Scarrott; but it is so opposed to the fundamental doctrine, that there is no estoppel where an interest passes, that we cannot accept it as sound. And at p. 736, it is said that the remedy for waste by action on the case, is confined to acts of voluntary waste, and does not extend to permissive waste, which is not only wrong, but is shewn to be so by the very book itself, at p. 484.

We find omissions of statutes in several places, viz. at p. 16, of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 49, the last act as to the Duchy of Cornwall; at p. 67, of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 125, enabling overseers to provide offices; and the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34, s. 136, the cognate act to the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 74; at p. 74, of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 23, repealing the 27 Hen. 6, c. 5, as to the four Sundays in harvest; at p. 78, and indeed, altogether, of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, which for some months put the law as to leases on a different footing to what it was either before or after; at p. 130, of the Common-law Procedure Act (1854), s. 28; at p. 158, of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 110, suspending the operation of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 26; and at pp. 465 and 519, of the 6 Anne, c. 31, and the 10 Anne, c. 14, as to liability for fire. And we also find the following recent cases reported previous to 1862, omitted, though bearing on the subject:—Cox v. Bishop (3 Jur., N. S., 499; 26 L. J., Ch., 389); In re Walkworth (26 L. J., Bank., 61); Bromley v. Chesterton (27 L. J., C. P., 23); Price v. Worwood (5 Jur., N. S., 472; 28 L. J., Ex., 329); Reg. v. Thornton (6 Jur., N. S., 799; 29 L. J., M. C., 162); and Cadle v. Moody (7 Jur., N. S., 1249; 30 L. J., Ex., 385). Udell v. Harrison, Baddely v. Vigurs, and Giddins v. Dodd should have been cited at pp. 59, 278, and 287 respectively; and Henderson v. Mears is only referred to as reported in Foster & Finlason.

With respect to the cases reported during the year 1862, it would be too much to expect them all to be cited in a book of this bulk (and therefore so long in the press), even though not published till March, 1863; but as some of them are in the text itself, and there is an addenda and corrigenda containing others, we ought to have them all in one or the other. We do not find this to be the case, and we, therefore, for the convenience of such of our readers as may buy the book, refer them to the following cases reported in the Jurist and Law Journal for 1862, but not mentioned by Mr. Cole:—Jones v. Nixon (8 Jur., N. S., 648; 31 L. J., Ex., 505); Hall v. The City of London Brewery Company (9 Jur., N. S., 18; 31 L. J., Q. B., 257); Pellatt v. Boosey (8 Jur., N. S., 1107; 31 L. J., C. P., 281); Phen v. Poppleswell (8 Jur., N. S., 1104; 31 L. J., C. P., 235); Venning v. Bray (8 Jur., N. S., 1039; 31 L. J., Q. B., 181); Turner v. Barnes (9 Jur., N. S., 199; 31 L. J., Q. B., 170); Holland v. Cole (8 Jur., N. S., 1066; 31 L. J., Ex., 481); Gurton v. Gregory (31 L. J., Q. B., 302); and Jones v. Davies (8 Jur., N. S., 592; 31 L. J., Ex. Ch., 116).

Subject to these strictures, which, when examined, will not be found to be very heavy, we approve of this edition. The new law has been very thoroughly collected as a whole; much additional information from the old law has been incorporated; no pains have been spared, and much of the old materials remodelled. It is true that the arrangement of materials and the discussion of subjects might often be better, but the form and matter of the book, as it has been handed down, must in a great measure bear the blame of this. Nothing but a new arrangement of the book could entirely obviate the one fault, an entire re-writing the other. The considerations, however, which pressed on Mr. Wollaston many years ago pressed with infinitely greater force on Mr. Cole; and we not only do not wonder at his yielding to them, but do not see how he could avoid that course.

In fine, we may say, that in Mr. Cole's edition we have our old well-known work brought down to the present state of the law. To say that, is not merely to say that it should be on the shelves of every lawyer who has anything to do with the law of landlord and tenant, but (looking to the reception of former editions) to say that, as a fact, this will be so.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.—A meeting of this society was held at its rooms, 3, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, on Monday, May 18, Lord Brougham in the chair; when a paper was read by Mr. Thomas Webster, "On the Amendment of Proceedings on the Trial of Issues of Fact at Law and in Equity in Cases requiring the Evidence of Experts." A discussion ensued, in which the Chairman, Mr. Hume Williams, Mr. R. Stuart, Dr. Hancock, and Mr. Newton took part.

We have to record the decease of Harry Edgell, Esq., benchet of Gray's-inn, at the advanced age of 96. He was we believe the oldest gentleman at the bar, although some members of it, who are still living, entered the Profession sooner.

COMMISSIONERS TO ADMINISTER OATHS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following gentlemen to be London Commissioners to administer oaths in the High Court of Chancery:—Robert Piggott Oldershaw, of No. 74, Warwick-square, Pimlico; Sampson Samuel, of No. 31, New Broad-street, Bishopsgate, City; and Joseph Hall, of New Park-road, Stockwell, and No. 21, Coleman-street, City.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 6, 1863.

ALTHOUGH, at first sight, the rule of law which prohibits a solicitor from receiving a donation from his client may appear somewhat harsh, there is little doubt that its operation is, in general, most beneficial; and that, as depending on considerations of public policy, it ought, on all occasions, to be most strictly upheld.

Solicitors enjoy a species of monopoly; their charges are not liable to be reduced by open competition, and there are certain fixed scales by which their amount is fixed, and according to which, in most cases, their services are amply remunerated.

Instances undoubtedly sometimes, though perhaps rarely, occur, in which the ordinary charges of a solicitor will not form an adequate remuneration for the labour he may have bestowed, or the sacrifices he may have made, on behalf of the interests of his client.

The rule, however, is inflexible—a solicitor pending a suit, and during the relation of solicitor and client, or while the influence attending it subsists, must be contented with the charges which the law allows him to make; and he cannot receive any gift from his client by way of additional remuneration.

Even if the client, out of his gratitude, voluntarily offers or promises to make his solicitor a donation beyond his bill of costs, it becomes the duty of the solicitor to protect his client against the effects of his own generosity—to decline the gift, and to rest contented with the payment of his ordinary charges.

If such rule did not exist, there would be often a great temptation for solicitors, either by direct representations or covert insinuation, to lead a client to suppose that the success of his suit depended upon extraordinary exertions on the part of the solicitor, and ought therefore to be recompensed by more than ordinary pay on the part of the client. This rule has recently been acted upon by the Lord Chancellor in the case of O'Brien v. Lewis (9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 528; affirming the decision of Sir J. Stuart, V. C., Id. 321). In that case, a bill had been filed by the plaintiff against a firm of solicitors, seeking to recover from them a sum of 300*l.*, retained by them as a gift to them by the plaintiff for professional services. It seems, according to the defence set up by the solicitors, that a bill in equity had been filed against the plaintiff, containing many personal charges against him; that he employed them as his solicitors to conduct the defence; and that the plaintiff, being under considerable anxiety respecting it, said he would make them a present of 300*l.*, beyond their fair bill of costs in the matter, if they could get it settled and arranged. The solicitors accepted the promise, settled the suit by obtaining payment of 800*l.*, out of which they retained the 300*l.* so promised. Nine years afterwards (during which, however, the relation of solicitor and client had continued), the plaintiff filed his bill against the solicitors; and the Lord Chancellor, affirming the decision of Sir J. Stuart, V. C., held that the plaintiff was entitled to the restoration of the 300*l.*; that the defendants were not entitled to costs; and dismissed the petition of rehearing, with costs. His Lordship observed, that it was the duty of the defendants to have said that the plaintiff could make no promise to give them 300*l.*, and that they would accept no such gift. Lapse of time was no bar to the claim; and that even if there had been any recognition of the promise by the plaintiff, the promise itself being void, it amounted to nothing. His Lordship, however, said he did not order the 300*l.* to be returned to the plaintiff for his individual merit, but because it was his duty to uphold the general rule on considerations of public policy, that a solicitor must not be a party to such proceeding.

By a strange anomaly it has been held, that although a solicitor cannot take a gift from his client by a transaction inter vivos, he may take a gift from him under his will, even although the solicitor may himself have drawn the will; such, at any rate, is the law as laid down by the Lords Justices in Hindson v. Weatherell (5 De G., Mac., & G. 301).

Why their Lordships should have arrived at such a conclusion it is difficult to say.

Upon what principle is a solicitor forbidden to receive a gift from a client by act inter vivos, whilst, even when the solicitor makes the will himself, he can take a legacy from the same client? A. B. the client, grateful to C. D. the solicitor, for his professional assistance in a suit, makes him, according to promise, a gift of 1000*l.*; such gift, according to the decision of the Lord Chancellor, in O'Brien v. Lewis, is clearly bad, and the sum so given may be recovered from the solicitor. But suppose the client for the same motives gives by will 1000*l.* to the solicitor, though the solicitor himself drew the will, the legacy is good.

Now, it would have been very satisfactory to the Profession, if the Lords Justices, when they decided the case of Hindson v. Weatherell, had given satisfactory reasons for their decision, and explained the principles upon which a court of equity is justified in setting aside a donation inter vivos from a client to a solicitor, while it declines to set aside a donation by a will. Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, L. J., indeed, says, "that it is impossible that a testamentary gift by a client to a solicitor can against the latter be liable to all the same considerations as a gift to him inter vivos, though it may be open to some of them."

The question, however, we humbly submit, was not whether a testamentary gift was liable to all the same considerations as a gift inter vivos in such a case, but whether it was not open to all or some of those material considerations, which the Court of Chancery, proceeding upon grounds of public policy, holds sufficient to invalidate a gift inter vivos by a client to his solicitor.

Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., in his judgment, decided in favour of the will, partly on the ground, that if the doctrine contended for by the plaintiff could be applied to the relation of solicitor and client, it must necessarily be applied to that of guardian and ward.

His Lordship also said, "that there was obviously a great distinction between the jurisdiction of the Court as applied to contracts, and as applied to testamentary dispositions. In the case of a written contract the Court can direct the instrument to be delivered up to be cancelled, but it has no such jurisdiction with regard to a will." This reason of his Lordship seems, however, not to be a very good one, for although it may be true that a court of equity has no power to direct a will to be delivered up to be cancelled, it surely has power to declare that a person who has obtained a particular bequest by means of a fraud, is a trustee for the person injured by such fraud, as in the old case of Thynn v. Thynn (1 Vern. 295).

The case of Hindson v. Weatherell may be rightly decided; there may be good grounds for distinguishing between a gift by deed and a gift by will from a client to his solicitor; but is to be regretted that the Lords Justices did not tell us what those grounds are; their not having done so induces us to think that the distinction taken by their Lordships was one of that kind which has been characterised as being "without a difference."

SUGGESTIONS FOR AN ALTERATION IN THE PRESENT SYSTEM OF LAW REPORTING

Submitted for the Consideration of the Bar. By W. T. S. DANIEL, Q. C.

WE have just received the inclosed, which we hasten to lay before the Profession:—

"The present system of law reporting is the subject of very general and well-founded complaint on the part as well of the judges as of all classes of practitioners. The evils complained of are various; but the following may be regarded as the chief:—

"1. Confusion and uncertainty in the law, producing perplexity in the administration of justice; this arises sometimes from the practice of indiscriminately reporting cases, without reference to the importance or character of the decisions—sometimes from the reports containing an inaccurate or imperfect statement of the facts on which the decisions are founded.

"2. The difficulty of digesting the enormous mass of constantly accumulating materials, and distinguishing the good from the bad.

"3. The expense to the practitioner arising from the necessity of possessing himself of the several series of contemporaneous reports in that branch of the profession in which he practises.

"All these evils, it is obvious, are attributable to one cause—the multiplication of contemporaneous reports. This multiplication has arisen from applying the principle of competition to correct the evils of prolixity, delay, and expense, incident to the system of authorised reporting. The evils of prolixity and delay have, to a great extent, been cured; but the evil of expense has been aggravated, and new evils created, namely, confusion and uncertainty in the law producing perplexity in the administration of justice.

"Everybody is calling out for a remedy. Some say, before anything is done, let there be inquiry, and, to that end, pray the Lord Chancellor to issue a Royal Commission. To these I respectfully answer, the evil is felt and admitted, and the cause is patent. The stage of inquiry is passed. What is wanted is a remedy, and experience proclaims that a Royal Commission can only report the evil, and suggest, but not provide, the remedy. Others say, the decisions of the judges are the expositions of the law ex non scripto, and it is as much the duty of the State to promulgate to the public this branch of the law, as it is its duty to promulgate the law ex scripto—to publish the statutes; and, therefore, say they, let Government be. applied to for a grant to start the publication, and guarantee it against loss. To these, I, with equal respect answer—Government assistance would imply Government control; and this would involve the evils of an assumption of patronage, and an attempt at privilege, thus bringing round again the evils of a monopoly, to be again corrected by the equivalent evils of uncontrolled competition. I venture to suggest, that without either a royal commission or a Government grant, it is within the power of the bar to supply an adequate remedy.

"I recognise and base my suggestions upon the principle, that the proper preparation and publication of those judicial decisions, which are expositions of the law ex non scripto, is a public duty, and that the public have a right to expect that it will be discharged by a recognised body in the State qualified for the purpose. The qualifications of such a body should be—independence of the Government; co-operation with, but not dependence upon, the judicature; adequate knowledge of the law, and experience in the practice of the Courts; combined with special skill and experience in the art of reporting. These several qualifications are possessed in the highest degree by the bar, and by no other body of men—and the bar form a recognised body in the State—why should they not combine and undertake the duty? My proposal is that they should; and for that purpose I suggest that the members of the bar now engaged in reporting, or such of them as should think proper, together with any other members of the bar who may offer acceptable services or co-operation, should form themselves into a body of associated reporters, and, by means of a proper system of division of labour and editorial superintendence, undertake the preparation and publication, in weekly numbers, at a moderate charge, of the decisions of all the superior courts of law and equity, including the Probate and Divorce Courts, the Admiralty Court, and the House of Lords and Privy Council.

"If this were well done, my expectation is, that the profession and the public would thankfully accept the publication as a sufficient record of all the decisions in courts of justice which they desire to possess, and that the demand on the part of the public for contemporaneous publications of the same decisions would greatly diminish, and in time cease. The demand for the one publication would then be increased to an extent much beyond that which is enjoyed by any of the existing publications; and thus far the advantages of a monopoly would be secured without its evils. The reporting which suffices for newspapers would of course not be interfered with.

"If the public and profession were thus satisfied by an early, efficient, and cheap publication of all the reports, the judges would, I think, soon find that, on the ground of public benefit, it would be expedient and desirable not to allow any other reports to be cited as authority before them; and thus the advantages of a system of authorised reports would be secured without its evils. The entire success of the plan rests, it will be seen, upon the sustained combination of expedition, efficiency, and cheapness.

"Do vested interests stand in the way? Let it be remembered, that inasmuch as all the reports now cited in the courts are supplied by barristers, vested interests in the existing publications rest for their support upon the skill and labour of the bar. To the extent to which that skill and labour are now adequately remunerated, and the vested interest, is no more than a legitimate commercial profit, the plan I propose would, I think, provide means for fairly dealing with such vested interests. If there are any vested interests which arise from profits of commmercial undertakings in which the labours of the bar are inadequately remunerated, all such vested interests would properly be left to take care of themselves.

"Is capital a difficulty? I imagine the existing publishers would see their interest in promoting rather than in opposing the scheme, for I doubt whether the present unrestrained competition does not produce its evils to them as well as others. I should, therefore, if the bar entertained my plan, suggest that the publishers be approached with proposals which should involve fair participation in profits, based upon the principle that the publishers should be agents not principals—in short, that the copyright should be considered as the property of the body of associated reporters. If the publishers declined to co-operate, I would try a subscription list by application to the judges, and the several members of both branches of the profession, and with strong hopes of success. A good subscription list would, I doubt not, be a sufficient inducement to a printer of established reputation and sufficient capital, to run a fair share of the risk.

"The details of the plan I do not enter upon—my present object is to know whether my brethren of the bar think the plan feasible, and would be willing to aid in carrying it into execution. I am anxious to collect their opinions, and shall be obliged by any answer with which I may be favoured to this communication.

"If I find that those suggestions are favourably received, I should then desire to obtain the co-operation of those who would be willing to be coadjutors, with a view to maturing a plan for commencing next Michaelmas Term.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The decision in Atkinson v. Holby (reported on appeal to the House of Lords in 9 Jur., part 1, p. 503), is, I venture to say, an ill-considered reversal of a well-considered judgment of the Lords Justices. Lord Cranworth expresses a wish that he could have adopted the view of the Lords Justices; but, in his concluding remarks, his Lordship observes, that they (the Lords Justices) do not put their construction upon the ground of any binding authority, but simply upon the general ground that they think it ought to be so. Now, it appears to me, that this mode of alluding to a decision of a tribunal of so high and excellent a character as that of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, is open to comment. A certain knowledge of cases is often properly assumed in judgments, especially in those of the superior courts; nor does it at all follow, because cases are not cited, that the judgment is not grounded on any authority. The single authority to which Lord Cranworth refers in the course of his judgment, is Gallini v. Gallini (3 Ad. & El. 340), which case did not assist his construction, as I shall presently attempt to shew, but rather strengthened that of the Court of Appeal.

The case of Atkinson v. Holby was originally before the Master of the Rolls, and is reported on appeal before the Lords Justices, under the title of Atkinson v. Barton (8 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 902), and involved the often mooted points of estates tail and cross remainders in tail by implication from the gift over in default of issue. The particular and residuary devise in question, so far as material was, for default of such issue (issue of John and George, sons of Faith, a daughter of the testator, who both died without issue), to Ann, Fanny, Faith, and Elizabeth, the other children of his said daughter, for their respective lives, in equal shares, with remainder to trustees and their heirs to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder, in four equal shares, to the use of the children of his said four granddaughters, and the heirs of their bodies, such children taking their mothers' shares as tenants in common in tail, with remainder to the survivors or survivor of such children and the issue of their, his, or her body in tail, and in default of issue of his said granddaughters, over. The facts were, that Ann had married Atkinson and died, and that the plaintiff and the defendant Ann Barton were her only issue, and that Fanny, Faith, and Elizabeth, the other granddaughters, had all died without having been married. The suit was instituted by the plaintiff for a partition, and a declaration of the rights of himself and his married sister; and he claimed one-eighth originally, i. e. by express devise, and six-eighths by descent, as heir in tail of his mother, on the ground that, subject to the gifts in tail to each of the children of the respective granddaughters, and the cross remainders in tail amongst the children of each granddaughter, there arose an immediate estate tail by implication in each granddaughter and cross remainders in tail amongst all the granddaughters, from the words "in default of issue by my said granddaughters." The defendant, sister of the plaintiff, on the other hand, contended that the words in question referred to the issue before mentioned, viz. the children and their issue, and created cross remainders amongst the respective stocks, so that the plaintiff and herself were entitled in equal moieties. It was, indeed, further contended for the defendant, that the words "survivors or survivor of such children," &c. referred to all the children of all the grandchildren, but the judgment of the Lords Justices went upon the implication of cross remainders. This would appear to be so reasonable a construction, and so strictly in accordance with the principle, supposed hitherto to have been established, of referring default of issue to the objects of the preceding devise, if in fee-simple or in fee-tail, provided such objects be not one or two of a class or otherwise restricted, that I confess I read with amazement the reversal of this decision by the House of Lords, sustained, as such reversal was alone professed to be, by Gallini v. Gallini (3 Ad. & El. 341); Clache's case (Dy. 330 b.); Rabbeth v. Squire (4 De G. & J. 406); Stanley v. Leonard (Amb. 355); and Lord Scarborough v. Saville (1 Swanst. 537), to all of which cases, except Gallini v. Gallini, Lord Chelmsford refers. His Lordship, however, notices that the words are not "in default of such issue," as if the word "such" would have made an important difference, totally ignoring the rule to which I have referred. Lord Kingsdown follows in the same track. He cannot understand the force of the argument of Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., that, if estates tail were implied in the granddaughters, the children would be prejudiced; he cannot, however, help entertaining some doubts, however confident his own opinion may be—strange mixture of doubt and confidence! Everybody is aware that estates tail may be barred; the children, on attaining the age of twenty-one years could, of course, exercise this right so as to defeat cross remainders amongst themselves and amongst the stocks, but the real question was, who should have the benefit of there being no issue of any one or more of the stocks, or of deaths under majority; and Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., very reasonably thought that (as far as the argument from convenience went) it was better to give the children of the other stocks the benefit of such failure than the mother of that stock which failed.

Ginger d. White v. White (Willcs, 348), and Ives v. Legge (3 Durn. & E. 488), together with many others, are clear authorities for the referential construction for which I contend; and I am bold to say that the decision in question is in direct conflict with those authorities. The question in Gallini v. Gallini was, whether the particular gift should be sacrificed to the general intention; and the decision was, that both should be preserved, the heir-in-tail claiming against his brothers and sisters; but there was no question between the head of one stock that had failed and the members of another stock, although, as far as the dictum of the learned judge goes, it seems to cover this case, and to support the view of the Lords Justices. Referring to the argument which had been suggested against the grandchildren in that case taking estates tail by purchase, because such estates tail might lapse, Tindal C. J., observes, that the testator might alter his will in such a case, and then proceeds (p. 353)—"And, again, it is clear that even in the case just above supposed, after failure of the issue of all the other grandchildren, the issue of the grandchild so dying in the lifetime of the testator would ultimately take under the estates tail limited to the sons and daughters of the testator, which would then come into operation." It is true that there was a clause of survivorship in Gallini v. Gallini, but the learned Chief Justice does not appear to have been considering anything beyond the effect of the gift over in default of issue. I think I am justified, therefore, in asserting that this case, far from affecting the construction referential to the preceding children, tenants in tail, and their issue, rather confirms that construction; but even if the question had arisen, and a different construction had obtained in that case, as the objects of the preceding devise were limited to surviving children, the decision would not have governed the case of Atkinson v. Holby. In Stanley v. Leonard (Amb. 335), there was a devise to Samuel for life, with remainder to the eldest son of Samuel in tail male; and for want of issue of the said Samuel, over. This was a clear case for the implication of an entail in Samuel, one only of his children being the object of the preceding devise. Lord Scarborough v. Saville has not the slightest bearing upon the point. Clache's case and Rabbeth v. Squire were cited to prove, that where an attempt had been made to create cross remainders, cross remainders would not be implied. This was the difficulty felt by the Master of the Rolls; but it was entirely disposed of by the judgment of Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., and the decision of the House of Lords did not proceed upon that ground; so that, in all probability, as it now stands, it would not have the approval of his Honor, notwithstanding that the original judgment is restored.

Lord Cranworth, however, deeming some additional argument necessary for supporting the construction which he put upon this devise, introduced a not very lucid statement of possible events, which might have produced, as he said, an intestacy; but he overlooked the fact, that an interest in abeyance is still an interest which the trustees to preserve contingent remainders were bound to support; and, further, that the only ground for implying an estate tail in the parent, tenant for life, is, that none of his issue may be excluded. Now, in this case all the issue would have taken by the implication of cross remainders amongst the respective stocks of children, far more equitably, and in accordance with the intention of the testator, than by the implication of estates tail in, and cross remainders amongst, the grandchildren. It is not the parent, but the issue of the parent, that the rule is intended to benefit.

The House of Lords, as a supreme court of appeal is not happily constituted. That two or three peers however eminent in the study of the law, but of desultory exercise therein, should be able to review and reverse the decisions of the ablest acting judges of the day, appears to me to be an unfortunate item in our present legal system.

Your obedient servant,
Rolls Chambers, Chancery-lane, G. L.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

TRINITY TERM, 26 VICT.—June 4, 1863.

THIS Court will on Saturday, the 13th, Monday, the 15th, Tuesday, the 16th, and Monday, the 22nd, days of June instant, and the five following days, hold Sittings, and will proceed in disposing of the cases in the New Trial, Special, and Crown Papers, and any other matters then pending; and will also hold a Sitting on Saturday, the 4th day of July next, for the purpose of giving judgments only.

BY THE COURT.

JUDICIAL SOCIETY.—A meeting of this society took place at its rooms, 4, Saint Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square, on Monday, 1st June, R. P. Collier, Esq., Q. C., M. P., in the chair; when a paper was read by Mr. Frederick Lawrence, entitled, "The Circuit System: its influence on the administration of justice, and on the interests of the bar." A discussion ensued, in which Mr. Hake, Mr. J. O. Griffiths, Mr. C. H. Hopwood, and Dr. W. Smith took part.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.—A meeting of this society took place at its rooms, 3, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, on Monday, 1st June. Lord Brougham occupied the chair during the early part of the evening, in which he was afterwards replaced by W. T. S. Daniell, Esq., Q. C. A paper was read by Mr. Serjeant Burke on "The present state of the Law of Copyright in Literature and the Fine Arts, with a view to its amendment." A discussion ensued, in which, after a few observations from Lord Brougham, Mr. Field, Mr. C. Clark, Mr. B. Stewart, Mr. Gumbart, Mr. Underdown, Mr. Blaine, Mr. Pulling, and Mr. T. Webster addressed the meeting. It was then agreed that the paper should be printed, and taken into consideration on some future evening.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint William Robert Phelps, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, to be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the Island of Saint Helena.

COMMISSIONER TO ADMINISTER OATHS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed John Logan Grover, Gent., of No. 150, Pentonville-road, to be a London Commissioner to administer oaths in the High Court of Chancery.

THE CONSOLIDATED GENERAL ORDERS of the HIGH COURT of CHANCERY; with Regulations as to certain Fees and Charges.

"The new arrangement of the Orders leaves nothing to be wished for: it is clear, convenient, and admirably adapted for the purposes of practice. Although the language of the old Orders has been adhered to as far as possible, it has been altered whenever it was found necessary for the purpose of adapting them to the present practice, and also for the purpose of removing those doubts and difficulties which so frequently arose under the old Orders."—Jurist, Jan. 21, 1860.

STONE'S PRACTICE of PETTY SESSIONS.

With the Statutes, a List of Summary Convictions, and an Appendix of Forms. Seventh Edition. By THOMAS BELL and LEWIS W. CAVE, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. With a Supplement, bringing the Statutes and Cases up to 1863. 12mo., price 18s. cloth.

"It is remarkable for a rare combination of conciseness and clearness in the composition, which have recommended it to magistrates who have not been educated as lawyers, and to whom, therefore, the books written for the use of lawyers are often obscure by reason of their technicalities. The present editors have preserved this characteristic of Mr. Stone's volume in their own abundant additions to it."—Law Times.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 13, 1863.

WHILE the benefits conferred on the world by the introduction of railway travelling are too obvious to need comment, an imperative duty is imposed on the law to guard against the recklessness, carelessness, or cupidity of those to whom the management of that travelling is intrusted. Railway companies are necessarily invested with enormous powers and privileges, while the control over them is comparatively small. In the event of death or accident to persons using their lines, they, being corporations, are free from all responsibility to the criminal law; and almost the only checks upon them are actions for damages for injury to the living, or compensation to relatives for the loss of the dead, under Lord Campbell's Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93. Numerous instances of such actions are reported in the books, and are familiar to every one. And juries are disposed to be rather severe on companies in this respect, perhaps too much so, although we cannot help considering this a fault on the right side.

The railway companies, however, chafe under this wholesome discipline, and, if we are to judge by their language and conduct, seem to demand a general license to maim and slay with impunity. They have long complained of having to pay large sums of money for their own negligence, as if that were a piteous grievance; but the case of Pym v. The Great Northern Railway Company (2 B. & S. 767; 8 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 819) appears to have brought their indignation to a climax. In that case a gentleman of fortune having been killed by a mishap—we will not say by an "accident," for the word would be misapplied—to a train in which he was travelling, occasioned by the negligence of the servants of the company, his wife, as his personal representative, sued the company on behalf of herself and their children, and recovered 13,000*l.* damages, which were afterwards reduced by the Court to 9000*l.* Cockburn, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, said—"We are not insensible to the argument ab inconvenienti, founded on the very serious consequences which might ensue to a railway company in the event of a fatal accident happening from negligence to an individual of very large fortune. But we think this is rather for the consideration of the Legislature, as to whether any limit should be put to the liability, than for us."

Acting under the feelings we have described, and encouraged by the hint thrown out in this judgment, a bill was introduced into the House of Commons, during the present session, by Sir John Fergusson, intitled "A Bill to regulate the Compensation for Accidents," which, on the second reading, was rejected by a majority of 90 against 70. The following were its principal clauses:—

"Sect. 2. No railway company shall be liable to pay any larger sums than the following in respect of any passenger killed or injured, unless such passenger be insured as hereinafter provided; that is to say, no greater sum, in respect of any first-class passenger, than 400*l.*; in respect of any second-class passenger, than 300*l.*; in respect of any third-class passenger, than 200*l.*

"Sect. 3. It shall be lawful for any passenger to demand, that the railway company at whose office he is booked shall (in addition to the amount of compensation hereinbefore limited) insure him against injury or death consequent upon any accident during his journey, and the said company shall insure him accordingly; and the following conditions shall apply to such insurances:—

"(1). No company shall be required to insure any person against injuries or death to a greater amount than 3000*l.*:"

"(2). The premiums to be paid to railway companies for such insurance against injuries or death shall not exceed — for 500*l.*; — for 1000*l.*; — for 2000*l.*; and — for 3000*l.*:"

"(3). With respect to passengers holding annual or periodical tickets, the premiums for insurance shall not exceed such rates as the Board of Trade shall approve:

"(4). The company insuring shall and may make by-laws or regulations, to be approved by the Board of Trade, as to the times when such insurances shall be applied for, and the mode of entering into the same."

There were, also, the following provisions relative to shipowners:—

"Sect. 4. Subject to the proviso hereinafter contained, no shipowner shall be liable to pay any greater sum than 200*l.* in respect to any passenger killed or injured, unless such passenger be insured as hereinafter mentioned.

"Sect. 5. It shall be lawful for any passenger to demand, that the shipowner to whom he pays his passage money shall (in addition to the compensation hereinbefore limited) insure him against injury or death consequent upon any accident during his voyage; and (subject to the proviso hereinafter contained) the said shipowner shall insure him accordingly to any amount, not exceeding 2000*l.*, at such rates, and subject to such conditions, as the Board of Trade shall from time to time approve: provided, that any shipowner may refuse to insure the passengers by any or all of his ships; but if he shall so refuse, he shall not, with respect to such passengers, be entitled to the benefit of the restrictions and provisions of this act."

Although this impudent bill, with its heartless tariff of human life, has been rejected by the Legislature, it is by no means clear that we are done with the subject. The railway interest is strong in Parliament, as clearly shewn by the above minority, and railway companies are sympathised with by many persons on account of the exaggerated and groundless claims so constantly set up against them for trivial and even fictitious injuries. The answer, however, is, that while this imposes on judges and juries the duty of protecting companies to the uttermost against such claims, it affords no reason whatever for protecting them against the consequences of the proved misconduct or negligence of themselves or their servants. If we examine the causes of the misfortunes which have happened to trains travelling on railways, we shall find many of them clearly traceable to misconduct or negligence in the companies; such as bad materials used in the construction of the lines, engines, or carriages, employing improper persons as servants, overworking or underpaying such as are employed, running trains too soon after one another, &c.; others are owing to the misconduct or negligence of their servants; others to the recklessness of passengers; while those which come under the true description of "accidents," i. e. mischiefs which happen notwithstanding every reasonable care taken to prevent them, are exceedingly few. It may be hard, no doubt, in some cases to hold a company responsible for the acts of every one of a numerous staff of servants; but—"qui sentit commodum sentire debet et onus"—against this must be set the enormous profits they are enabled to make, and the powers invested in them for carrying on the general traffic of the country, of which they have almost a monopoly. And as to servants, it is in the power of these companies to follow the example of sheriffs, who, being responsible for the acts of their officers, take care to employ none except those for whose conduct they have taken ample security. But, in any event, if a conflict arises between the profits of railway companies and the lives and limbs of her Majesty's subjects, so that the law is compelled to deal harshly with the one or the other, we have no hesitation in saying that its own general principles, as well as the obvious dictates of humanity, give the latter a prior claim to protection.

Correspondence.

EX PARTE MORGAN, RE WOODHOUSE.

SIR,—The excessive lucidity of the Lord Chancellor's judgment in Ex parte Morgan (reported in 9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 559) must have dazzled your reporter, for I cannot in any other way account for the inaccuracy of his marginal note to that case. The deed in question was not a deed of composition, but a deed by which the debtor assigned all his personal estate to trustees, in trust for such of his creditors as should execute the deed within a limited time; and the decision was merely an application of the well-settled rule, that the exclusion of any of the creditors from the benefit of a deed of arrangement, is sufficient to prevent its operation under the repealed six-sevenths clause, or under the new three-fourths clause which is now perplexing lawyers. It was not decided in that case that a composition deed can, under any circumstances be an act of bankruptcy, nor was it decided that trust deeds, not providing for the distribution of the whole of the debtor's estate, can bind dissenting creditors. Tetley v. Taylor (1 El. & Bl. 521) was not overruled, and it is not probable that even the Lord Chancellor will venture to overrule it, if he should ever have the opportunity.

I may take this occasion to observe, that the regulation made by the Lord Chancellor, under which all appeals in bankruptcy are heard by him is, in its petty way, unconstitutional and mischievous. His Lordship's reason for taking his rickety child under his own exclusive care, as far as he can do so, is obvious, but not respectable. Nothing can be more opposed to the spirit of our judicial institutions than to trust the interpretation and application of an act of Parliament to the promoter or framer of it, even when the framer has manifested some capacity for law making. The consequences, to be now apprehended are, confusion worse confounded in the law of bankruptcy, and the unsettlement of the rules of interpretation. It is fortunate that Lord Westbury's interesting bantering is likely to undergo Spartan discipline in the courts of common law.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,
LEX.

Rebibo.

Forms of Decrees in Equity, and of Orders connected with them; with Practical Notes. By the Hon. Sir HENRY WILMOT SETON, Knt., late one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of Calcutta. The Third Edition, by W. H. HARRISON, Esq., M. A., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, and R. H. LEACH, Esq., one of the Registrars of the Court of Chancery. In two volumes, royal 8vo., pp. 1578.

[Stevens, Sons, & Haynes.]

"Seton on Decrees" made its appearance in 1830, and its value, not merely as a tool in the Chancery draftsman's workshop, but as a guide and key to Chancery jurisdiction and procedure, was at once recognised. The long delay of twenty-four years before the publication of the second edition by Messrs. Harrison & Leach, was not occasioned by any want of demand for it, but partly by the fire in Lincoln's-inn, in 1849, which destroyed the greater part of Mr. Harrison's manuscript, and partly by the great changes which the Legislature subsequently made in Chancery jurisdiction and practice; and with reference to those changes, the publication was even then premature, and the work was, with some few exceptions, limited in its scope to decrees and orders made at the time of the hearing and the subsequent stages of the suit. In the present edition, by the same editors, the bulk of the work has been more than doubled. To those who are familiar with the second edition, it is sufficient to say, that the new edition appears to have been prepared with equal care, that the same names appear on the title page, and that the editors acknowledge in their Preface the assistance of a great many able and experienced lawyers and officers of the court. To those who are not yet acquainted with the work, we may observe, that it is not valuable merely as a collection of Chancery precedents, but that, in addition to the exposition of the entire range of Chancery jurisdiction in action by the forms of decrees and orders, the book contains, in the very numerous and carefully prepared notes, a vast amount of practical information on almost every head of Chancery law, with references leading to much more. Thus, under such titles as "Account," "Personal Assets," "Real Assets," "Mortgages," "Specific Relief," "Infants," "Executors and Trustees," "Solicitors," "Injunctions," "Receivers," &c., may be found in a condensed form, matter which would be sought in vain in any of the text-books. The bewildered common-lawyer will nowhere find more efficient assistance in his investigation of the nature and extent of "equitable relief" than in this work.

W. T. S. DANIEL, ESQ., Q. C., AND THE REPORTING SYSTEM.

IN our last number (p. 204) we inserted a short pamphlet by W. T. S. Daniel, Esq., Q. C., intitled "Suggestions for an Alteration in the present System of Law Reporting, submitted for the Consideration of the Bar." This pamphlet has for some weeks been in private circulation among members of the bar; but Mr. Daniel has now sent it to us for publication, accompanied by a letter, in which he states that he protests that he does not desire to disregard the fair rights of property, nor to advocate a mere monopoly; that he desires to remedy what is thought by many to be a public evil; and that the adequacy and fitness of the remedy he suggests is a matter of which every one will judge for himself.

We have expressed our own views on the present state of the reporting system (ante, pp. 159, 167, 195) too recently to call for any fresh allusion to it, and will therefore dismiss the subject by inserting a letter which we find in The Law Times of last week, addressed to that journal. We make no remarks on this letter, and leave it to our readers to take its statements and suggestions for what they are worth:—

"Sir,—I have read Mr. Daniel's pamphlet, and should like, through you, to put to him a few questions. He proposes that the existing reporters should secede in a body from their present employers, and set up for themselves, under the name of 'The Associated Reporters,' compelling the present proprietors of reports to exchange a mere agency for their present valuable properties. This, in plain terms, is counselling us to 'a strike'—a proceeding not quite honourable on our parts, and that would be rather dangerous. I think employment could not be found for all of us by Mr. Daniel's scheme; more than half of us would not be wanted. Who is to choose from among us the fortunate men, and then what is to become of the rest of us? We shall have thrown up our present engagements to find ourselves ousted altogether. It is ridiculous to suppose that the present proprietors of the reports would tamely submit to the loss of their properties; they would combine, too, and the competition would be fiercer than ever. Equally ridiculous it is to suppose that, if we were to strike, as Mr. Daniel exhorts, plenty of others would not be found only too glad to fill the places we leave. Still further: if we were foolish enough to follow such advice, and go to the judges to ask for what you have rightly called 'exclusive audience,' what sort of answer should we get? Why, would they not say that they could not be dependent upon any single reports, for what are they to do while the full report is preparing? They must be informed what the other Courts have decided, or there will be conflicting decisions, and therefore an early report is as necessary as a formal one, and speed is incompatible with the care required for the report that is to be the final and full record of the decision. But, Sir, while agreeing with my brother reporters, with whom I have talked on the subject, that Mr. Daniel's scheme is as impracticable as it is unjust, I agree with him that the 'regular' reports are capable of improvement: they are too expensive. There is no reason why they should cost more than ten times as much as The Law Times reports, and six times as much as The Law Journal. It appears to me that the proprietors of the regular reports might advantageously combine their forces, and bring them out in a uniform series, at regular monthly issues, at a much less cost, and with far more profit to themselves. This would do all that is wanted, without the ruin to any interest involved in Mr. Daniel's plan. The Profession could then have just what they want—first, a rapid report, like those of The Law Times, The Jurist, and The Law Journal—surely a sufficient choice; and, secondly, a complete series of the 'regular' reports, got up with care, after reference to the pleadings and briefs, the arguments being revised by the counsel, and the judgments by the judges who delivered them. I make this suggestion as the result of a great deal of thought upon the subject by

"Temple, June 2, 1863."

FRIEDRICH CARL VON SAVIGNY.

In the May number of the Law Magazine, p. 77, is an article on the great German jurist Savigny, that will amply repay perusal. We insert the following extract from it, not only as illustrative of the rest of the article, but as bearing on a subject interesting to English as well as German jurists, and, indeed, to the jurists of every country:—

"In the year 1814 appeared his famous pamphlet 'Vom Beruf unseres Zeitalters für Gesetzgebung und Rechtswissenschaft.' There was a very general feeling in Germany in favour of internal unification by means of a code. Some wished to adopt that promulgated in Austria in 1811; others to form a new one; and Thibaut, who first gave expression to the common desire*, hoped that the representatives of the different States then assembled at the Congress of Vienna would help to realise it. This distinguished jurist was a warm and genuine patriot, as his great adversary in the 'friendly struggle†' was ready to confess; but he belonged to that philosophical school, fed on the theories of the eighteenth century, which believed that law can be produced, of the desired quality and at the shortest notice, on any soil. This belief was an offshoot of that extraordinary presumption, born of intellectual conceit and the pride of knowledge, which, in alliance with the maniacal strength of human misery, achieved such a mighty revolution in religion and politics, and which, having lost all respect for a past that seemed prolific only of abuses, imagined the present capable of realising absolute perfection. It placed the end and goal of jurisprudence in a universal code for all nations and all times; a code so complete as to give a mechanical guarantee for equity and justice, and it demanded, in that spirit, a common legislation for Germany.

"Savigny's reply was in the spirit which the nineteenth century was already bringing to bear on philosophy, science, and literature. It was an application and development of the lessons of Vico and Montesquieu, which may be summed up in that thought of Pascal, which considers, 'toute la suite des hommes pendant le cours de tant de siècles comme un même homme qui subsiste toujours et qui apprend continuellement.' The past was not to be studied merely that abuses might be exposed, or an imaginary perfection idolised; it was to be examined with a profounder attention, as the parent and nurse of the present and the future. Old things were regarded as the foundation of new, instead of being swept away with the besom of destruction, in order to make room for them. In fine, then arose that school which has not yet accomplished its work, which inculcates reform instead of revolution, a historical school, whose functions are not confined to the realm of jurisprudence.

"With a more loving regard for the past, a more earnest devotion to his own science, free from the spell exercised by the dream of mere outward uniformity, Savigny came forward as the champion of the common law; recognising, indeed, the value of legislation and codification, but requiring the former to proceed from the opinion and wants of the nation itself, and placing the latter in its true position, as a question of expediency, not a matter of necessity. He shewed that legal science was only in its infancy; that it would be folly to stereotype and fix for ever a state of the law obviously so imperfect, that Austria and Prussia would not give up their own new codes; and that, therefore, any attempt at general codification would most probably result in a permanent division of the nation into two halves. He pointed out the defects in all previous attempts at codification—in France, Austria, and even in Prussia. He shewed that the want and the vocation of the age was rather for progress in a common jurisprudence; and he maintained, with an earnestness and conviction that arose from a worthy but modest self-consciousness, that the nation had yet freshness and vigour enough to produce great jurists, and an intellectual fecundity that would only be hampered by the codifications that suited ageing nationalities. In his view, 'the call for codes arose from indolence and dereliction of duty on the part of the legal profession, which, instead of mastering the materials of the law, was overpowered and hurried headlong by their overwhelming mass.'

"Savigny's view of the whole subject of codification was based on his conception of the nature of private law, as originating directly from the people. Whatever may be the functions of the State in ordering and protecting its own existence through public and criminal law, private law proceeds immediately from the actions of individuals. The customs and precedents, the usages of merchants, and those of courts, are not merely the primitive, but the permanent organs of legal progress.

"He did not conceive the law as immutable, an heirloom that must not be bartered or changed. This charge against the historical school was unfounded. 'The human body,' he said (Zeitschr., iii, 4, Stimmen für und wider neue Gesetzbücher), 'is not unchangeable, but is incessantly growing and developing itself; and so I regard the law of each nation as a member of its body, not as a garment merely that has been made to please the fancy, and can be taken off at pleasure and exchanged for another.' He pointed out, too, the source of the whole agitation for codes, the attempt to rectify the law from above and at one stroke, in the tendency of the time, 'alles zu regieren, und immer mehr regieren zu wollen.' (Id., p. 44). In fine, he pointed out that the 'historical spirit is the only protection against a kind of self-deception, which is ever manifesting itself in individuals as well as in whole nations and epochs—that which makes us fancy what is peculiar to ourselves to belong to universal humanity. Thus, in time past, some, by leaving out prominent peculiarities, made a system of natural law out of the Institutes, and deemed it the very voice of reason; now there is none but pities such an error; yet we every day see people hold their juridical notions and opinions to be rational only because they cannot trace their genealogy. Whenever we are unconscious of our individual connexion with the great universe and its history, we necessarily see our own thoughts in a false light of generality and originality. Against this we are protected by the historical spirit, which it is the most difficult task to turn against ourselves.' (Vom Beruf, 115).

* "Ueber die Nothwendigkeit eines Allgemeinen bürgerlichen Rechts für Deutschland," in Civillistische Abhandlungen, pp. 404-409.

• "Optandum esset, ut hujusmodi legum institutio in temporibus auspicatur, que antiquioribus quorum acta et opera tractant, literis et rerum cognitione præstiterint. . . Infelix res namque est, cum ex judicio et selectis multis minus prudentia et eruditae antiquiorum opera utilitatem recomponuntur."—Bacon de Augm. Sc. L. 6, c. 2 (quoted by Savigny Vom Beruf, &c., p. 21).

"It was not surprising that Savigny's views should kindle opposition among the numerous party interested in maintaining the principles of the French rule, who hoped to be allowed to apply these principles for their own interests as soon as the old German tendency to isolation of races and territories again dared to manifest itself. Professor Gönner, of Landsbut, a representative of this class, accused Savigny of democratic views, and a desire to place the sovereign prerogative of legislation in the hands of the people and its jurists. He considered a code for all Germany inconsistent with a federation of sovereign states*. He desired to obliterate every trace of common nationality, and the very appearance of State subjection, although he had pressed on the States forming the Confederation of the Rhine the uniform adoption of the Code Napoléon, pure and simple. Savigny's reply† was crushing. He insisted on freedom as necessary for the development of law, as well as other functions of the intellectual life of nations. But he urged above all the preservation of every institution that supported or confirmed the national unity. He knew how important it was to withstand that spirit of 'particularism' which is unable to see the wood because of the trees; he was fully aware of the value of local and municipal institutions, but he felt that unity was of still more vital importance to his country.

"For the maintenance of such principles and the cultivation of historical jurisprudence, Savigny, Eichhorn, and Göschel had established, in 1815, the 'Zeitschrift für geschichtlichen Rechtswissenschaft.' The same objects which this journal had in view were still more efficiently aided by the great works of its chief conductors, Savigny's 'History of Roman Law in the Middle Ages,' and Eichhorn's 'Deutsche Staatsund Rechtsgeschichte.' Savigny's third great work exhibits the strange and unexpected result of the continuity of the Roman law during the darkest period of European history; and it depicts its resurrection and second life in the jurisprudence and literature of the Middle Ages. Professor Rudorff ascribes it to a special interposition of Providence in behalf of the historical school, that just when the veil had been lifted from the Middle Ages by the gigantic labours of Savigny, the obscurity that had enveloped the more remote antiquity of the Roman law was in a great measure dispelled by the discovery of the institutions of Gaius. The Roman law was thus traceable in its whole growth, from the whole forms of the republic, through the remains of the classic jurists, the Pandects of Justinian, its flickering life in the church, the municipalities, and the universities, till its revival in the schools of Bologna, and its re-asserted predominance in the tribunals of the Germanic empire. We quote here the eloquent words of Professor Rudorff, in describing the historical school:—

"The masters of the older schools had acknowledged only statutes as sources of law. The primitive customary law growing up out of the autonomy of individuals and the decisions of judges, and the legal profession, the natural representative of the nation in legal affairs, had in their eyes a scarcely tolerated existence. An international law without the State they were in all consistency obliged to deny. Now, the municipal law escaped from that legislative arbitrariness, that system of constraint in the domain of law, as theoretical politics shook off the arbitrary doctrines of the social contract or of conquest, as historical literature shook off the pragmatismus which pretended to explain everything by individual purpose and deliberate design. Law stepped out into the general highway of intellectual history, and the more precise formulation of the law giver, who stands in the centre point of his people and his history, appeared henceforth but as one of its manifold organs.

"The previous jurisprudence was wholly dogmatic, and its dogmas consisted only of wearisome logical categories, and rules for interpreting the legislative will. The jurists of the eighteenth century wanted altogether the historical, and even the genuine systematic, sense which deals with what is organically connected. The history of law to the rationalist lawyers was only a catalogue of the aberrations of the human mind; to the positivists it was a worthless collection of defunct and useless antiquities. The historical school restored to jurisprudence, besides the juxtaposition of cotemporary facts, the regular succession of a series of varying forms, in which we become aware of the presence and operation, from first to last, of the same national life, uniting, individualising, developing the whole. To it legal history is no longer dead matter. It knows only an immanent, not a transitory past, the knowledge of which is no superfluous, or at the best useful, preparation; but the whole of jurisprudence is as much history as system, only a different arrangement distinguishes the freedom of historical development from the necessary and well-proportioned systematic unity of the manifold institutes.

"Perhaps the most plausible objection to the historical school was founded on its supposed want of all higher philosophical thought. It was accused of standing aloof from the ideal. The works of Savigny alone, full of the soundest philosophy, stated in the most transparent style, are enough to refute this notion. The historical school only demands division of labour; it asks to have its own office duly appreciated, but it does not pretend to exist without using the aid of a rational and reflective jurisprudence. The two tendencies are as inseparable as soul and body. Savigny confined himself with rare self-denial to the exposition of the law on its historical side, and in its external form. He never loses sight of the worldly interest of his subject in 'speculations on the philosophy of legal history or the physiology of peoples, nor obscures the classical simplicity of his outlines by metaphysical deduction, the romance of theological colouring, or the dangerous play of etymological fancy.' His own answer to the want of philosophical thought with which his history has been charged, stands in the Zeitschrift, iii, p. 56. 'No confusion,' he says, 'is more pernicious than that of micrology with special knowledge of details. Every reasonable man must estimate micrology at a very low value, but accurate and minute knowledge of details is so indispensable in all history, that it is the only thing that can give it value. A legal history not based on this thorough investigation of particulars can give, under the title of great and powerful principles, nothing better than a general and superficial reasoning on half-true facts—a procedure which I deem so barren and fruitless, that, in comparison with it, I give the preference to an uncultivated empiricism †.'

* "Similar was the view of Altmendingen (Politische Ansichten, Wiesbaden, 1814), who applied the 'national theory' of law to the little states of Germany, confounding the notions of state and nation, and demanding a special code for each state.—Ein neues Trennungsmittel für die Deutschen, Zeitschrift, iv. 32."

† "Zeitschrift, vol. i, Verm. Schriften, iii, No. 52, p. 167."

* "See Savigny's By

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 20, 1863.

IN our Parliamentary report will be found at length the speech made by the Lord Chancellor, on bringing into the House of Lords his bill for the revision of the statutes. The speech, however, goes far beyond that immediate object, being an exposition of the evils in our law resulting from the accumulation of reports and statutes, and bringing forward great and important projects for its amendment.

The Lord Chancellor proposes to make a digest of the present law, both common and statute; but, in order to understand his Lordship's views, we must give his own words. He says—"I use the word 'digest' advisedly, because your Lordships may frequently hear any procedure of this kind described as an approach to codification. Now, I am not at all disposed to disguise my own individual opinion, that it is to the form of a code that the law of any advanced nation ought ultimately to be reduced; but I am not at all prepared to say that the law of England is now in such a state that it may be codified with advantage and success, and for this reason, that a codification of law is the last result which it attains when it has been perfected, and has reached its maturity. But if law is still in a transitory condition, it is not fit for that process. I regard the state of the English law as still transitory, because you have still in it the relics of barbarous times; you have still got that absurd division between the province of common law and the province of equity, not that distinction which is inherent in the nature of things between the written statute and the equity required for its just application, but two antagonistic systems; because, my Lords, you still have cases which would be decided one way on one side of Westminster Hall, and another way on the other side of Westminster Hall. Therefore, until you have got over that, and are in a condition to tell your statesmen and jurists that there is now but one rule in the law of England, and but one form of procedure, a rule is not known to be certain, and your procedure is likewise uncertain. Until you have attained to that, which the process of digestion will, I hope, facilitate, and of which it will be the introduction, you are not in a position to approach the formation of a code. Neither are you in a position to approach the framing of a code until you have got among the body of your lawyers that which is still wanting, viz. that precision of language—that accuracy of legislative construction.

tion and composition, which would be the means of framing acts of Parliaments and portions of your law with more simplicity, clearness, and exactness than at present characterise any of your attempts at legislation."

The whole of this proceeds on the assumption that all nations have their birth, growth, and manhood, both incipient and developed; and that in the last of these alone, codification of its laws, assumed to be among the greatest of all blessings, is practicable. If we carry the analogy farther, developed manhood will be followed by decay, and decay by dissolution. But we deny the proposition, that this state of growth, progress, and decay, is a necessary incident to all nations; and still more strongly do we protest against the assumption, that any particular nation is at any given moment—and especially that our own is, at the present moment—in the state approaching that manhood which is the sure forerunner of extinction. We hope for a better fate both for England and her laws.

The Lord Chancellor is entitled to the warmest thanks of the Profession and the public for his zeal in grappling with the evils of our existing system; and much of his plan will be universally hailed as a great improvement in our law. But, from some of his statements, we are compelled to record our dissent in the strongest terms, as unfounded in themselves, and calculated to mislead the Legislature. And here, at the outset, it is right to premise, that we have used no other report of his Lordship's speech than that found in The Times newspaper, which it is very possible may be incorrect or deficient in particular instances; and we say this without any disparagement to the reporter, for not only is it extremely difficult to report with precision a long speech on a subject so complicated, and in some parts so technical, as the present, but we are expressly told that the noble and learned lord "was occasionally quite inaudible in the gallery."

As to the actual state of the law, the Lord Chancellor, after bringing before the House the great inconveniences arising from the extreme number and bulk of our legal reports, which have been accumulating from the beginning of the fourteenth century to the present time, goes on to say:—

"Your Lordships have all repeatedly heard of 'the glorious uncertainty of the law.' It is the common opprobrium of our system, and has passed into a proverb, and the saying has taken its rise in the fact that no man can tell with certainty whether a particular case which he finds recorded, and which is supposed to govern the particular case in which he is interested, will or will not be followed by the judges."

But is this so? Lord Westbury's admiration of the Roman law is no secret; (see his Inaugural Address to the Juridical Society, in the papers of that body); still he may not be aware that to his favourite system the expression "glorious uncertainty of the law," has been applied as well as to the common law, and may have been so applied even earlier than it has been to the latter. In proof of this, see what the great historian Gibbon says in that chapter of his Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, in which he gives his masterly account of the Roman Jurisprudence (vol. 8, p. 44):—

"Instead of a statue, cast in a simple mould by the hand of an artist, the works of Justinian represent a tessellated pavement of antique and costly, but too often of incoherent fragments. The antinomies, or contradictions of the Code and Pandects, still exercise the patience and subtilty of modern civilians. They are sometimes the cause, and often the excuse, of the glorious uncertainty of the CIVIL law. (Id. 50). . . .

The civil jurisprudence, as it was abridged by Justinian, still continued a mysterious science, and a profitable trade, and the innate perplexity of the study was involved in tenfold darkness by the private industry of the practitioners. The expense of the pursuit sometimes exceeded the value of the prize, and the fairest rights were abandoned by the poverty or prudence of the claimants. . . . The discretion of the judge is the first engine of tyranny; and the laws of a free people should foresee and determine every question that may probably arise in the exercise of power and the transactions of industry. But the government of Justinian united the evils of liberty and servitude; and the Romans were oppressed at the same time by the multiplicity of their laws and the arbitrary will of their master." (Id. 120).

The Lord Chancellor proceeds:—"But there is a further and a great peculiarity in the law of England, which is this:—By a legal fiction, it is supposed that the law contains within itself the materials for the decision of every case, however novel in its circumstances; and accordingly, when the judges have a new case before them, they do not profess to arrive at the law by reasoning, by theory, or by philosophical inquiry, but they profess to discover it by searching among the records of former decisions for cases which are supposed to be analogous to the case before them; and they derive from these analogies the rule which they desire for the determination of the particular case."

We must dissent from every part of this sentence. So far from what is here stated being a "peculiarity" in our system, we believe something of the kind may be found in most other systems. And the assertion, that when a new case arises, our judges dispose of it by reference solely to decided cases, is in express contradiction of the practice of our tribunals, and the authority of Lord Coke, who tells us (Slade's case, 4 Rep. 94 a.), "He who will have advantage of precedents, ought to search for them at his peril and for his speed; for, the Court will not search for them: for, if none, or no usual precedents are shewn, the Court ought to adjudge according to law and reason."

The Lord Chancellor then states his first proposal:—"The first thing to be done with these reports is to revise and to expurgate them, to weed them of decisions that are in contradiction with one another; where there are opposing decisions, to settle those which ought to remain; to cleanse out and to get rid of all matters that are not warranted by the present state of the law; and to divide the reports into three classes. The first class would include all the old reports to the end of the seventeenth century; the second would include the reports of the eighteenth century to the death of George III; and the third would include the reports to the present time. I trust I may be successful in obtaining a commission that may be directed for the purpose of accomplishing these objects. . . . The result will be a body of recorded precedents brought into a moderate compass, and occupying, we may estimate, but a tenth of the bulk of the present reports."

We must defer to a future occasion the consideration of the rest of this important discourse.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.—A meeting of this society took place at its rooms, 3, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, on Monday, the 8th June, Lord Brougham in the chair. Dr. Waddilove read a paper on "The Sale of Benefices in connexion with the Augmentation of Benefices Bill now before Parliament." Mr. Edgar read a paper, contributed by Mr. J. B. Phear, on "The Costs of Actions in the Superior Courts."

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday, June 12.

REVISION OF THE STATUTE LAW.

The Lord Chancellor, who had given notice of his intention to call the attention of the House to the present state of the statute law, and of the reports of decisions in the courts of law and equity, and to introduce a bill for the revision of the statute law, said—I rise to make a statement with reference to the revision and expurgation of the statute law, from the earliest commencement of our legislation down to the beginning of the seventeenth century; the legislation, in fact, of about 500 years. Before I explain the provisions of my bill, I would ask your Lordships to favour me with your patient and indulgent attention, while I offer some observations on the present state and condition of the statute and common laws. I will endeavour to speak in plain and simple language, avoiding the ordinary reproach to the lawyer, that his words are taken from the vocabulary of his art. I would solicit the attention of all your Lordships as statesmen rather than as lawyers, as if none of your Lordships rejoiced in the conventional title of "learned," because I feel convinced that the subject of the amendment of the law has suffered greatly from the circumstance that it has been generally felt that the subject belongs to the lawyer class exclusively. A great philosopher, who was also a great lawyer, has said, "Jurisperiti tanquam a vinculis sermocinantur." He says that lawyers, when speaking of legislation, discourse in chains and shackles; because there is a limited horizon within which their views are bounded by reason of their having been so long familiar with a particular branch of subjects. But the same great author, Lord Bacon, says, of the knowledge and handling of these subjects, "Certe cognitio ista ad viros civiles proprie spectat." adding, in language which I am happy to say is applicable to your Lordships, "Qui optime norunt quid ferat societas humana, quid salus populi, quid sequitas naturalis, quid gentium mores, quid rerumpublicarum forme diverses, ideoque possint de legibus, ex principiis et præceptis tam æquitatis naturalis quam politici decernere." Your Lordships are aware that the laws are divided into written and unwritten law. The written is the statute law, and the decisions of the judges constitute the unwritten law of the land. The statute law is in a great measure supplemental to the common law, and a knowledge of the common is necessary in order to enable a man to read and understand the statute law. The common law is only traditional—it is supposed to reside in the breasts of the judges; and, accordingly, when it is necessary to ascertain it in this House, your Lordships require the attendance of the judges, who are called upon to declare what that law is. In like manner, in the great court of equity, to which belongs that large portion of natural justice which is repudiated by the common law, the judges have the power of determining what constitutes the rudiments of that law. This is, undoubtedly, a dangerous and a difficult trust. It is little less than legislative power, because the sources of common law are of the most varied character. It is probably derived in a great measure from customs and usages, recorded only in the memory of man; it is partly derived, no doubt, from old rules embodied in acts, of which no record now exists; it is partly made up of relics of the old Roman jurisprudence which remained so long throughout the land; and it is partly the result of customs and maxims handed down from one generation to another. The sources were so varied in ancient times that the custom of declaring the law also varied. In the old time it was impossible to know what the law was. The judges were not only legislators, but the worst of legislators—legislators ex post facto. Accordingly, at an early period, it became necessary for the protection of liberty, in order to get some kind of approach to uniformity, constancy, and regularity in the law, that the grounds and reasons of the judges' decisions should be given. At first an attempt was made to do so by entering the reasons for the judgments in the rolls of the court; and our court rolls, preserved from the time of Richard I, contain repeatedly the reasons for the decisions and sentences. At the latter end of the reign of Edward II, or in the beginning of the reign of Edward III, the practice of reporting the decisions of the judges began; and from that period down we have a series of judicial reports of those decisions. My Lords, that was a great security for the people, because it was an approach to certainty in the law. The origin and reason of it was a distinctive peculiarity in the English mind, namely, the love of precedent—a love of appealing to precedent rather than indulging in abstract reasoning. This was the only mode in which the law was recorded, and the only mode in which it became known. These reports were kept for a considerable period of time under the superintendence of the judges themselves, and great care was taken in sifting and ascertaining the grounds of the decision. The evil was, therefore, comparatively little; but in course of time, as the reports multiplied, and as the personal superintendence and care of the judges were withdrawn, great complaints began to arise; and so much inconvenience was felt, that as early as the time of Lord Bacon it became a subject of general dissatisfaction, which attracted his attention, and led to his compiling and publishing his celebrated book for the amendment of the law of England. I must admit—and perhaps, in stating this, I shall best recommend myself to your Lordships—that what I propose will do little, if anything at all, more than revive the proposal of that great man. The wisdom and excellence of that proposal has been admitted from age to age; and the fact, that nothing has been done to give effect to it, we must attribute to the singular inertia that characterised the English Legislature. Lord Bacon himself says:—

"The common law of England is no text law; but the substance of it consisted in the series and succession of judicial acts which from time to time have been set down in the reports, so that, as these reports are more or less perfect, the law itself is more or less certain, and, indeed, better or worse; whereupon a conclusion may be made, that it is hardly possible to confer upon this kingdom a greater benefit than that these books should be purged and revised, whereby they may be reduced to fewer volumes and clearer resolutions."

In the time of Lord Bacon these reports extended to about 60 or 70 volumes. During the 250 years that have passed since then, nothing has been done in the way of revision or expurgation; but these 60 or 70 volumes have grown to between 1100 and 1200 volumes. Nay, more, at this time there are at least 50 or 60 sets of reports pouring their streams into the immense reservoir of law, and creating what can hardly be described, but may be denominated a great chaos of judicial legislation. The evil arising from this is manifest. It was described by King James I in two speeches in 1607 and 1609, which go far to constitute his claim to the title of a wise king. Speaking at Whitehall in March, 1607, he said:—

"Where there is variety and uncertainty, although a just judge may do rightly, yet an ill judge may take advantage to do wrong, and then are all honest men that succeed him tied in a manner to his unjust and partial conclusions. Wherefore leave not the law to the pleasure of the judge. It were less hurt, that all the approved cases were set down, and allowed by Parliament, for standing laws in all time to come."

And again, in 1609, he refers to the subject in these words:—

"Though it be true that no text of law can be so certain, wherein the circumstances will not make a variation in the case, &c., yet could I wish that some more certainty were set down in this case by Parliament; for since the very reports themselves are not always so binding, but that divers times judges do disclaim them, and recede from the judgment of their predecessors, it were good that, upon a mature deliberation, the exposition of the law were set down by act of Parliament, and such reports therein confirmed as were thought fit to serve for law in all times hereafter, and so the people should not depend upon the bare opinions of judges and uncertain reports."

Now, if that difficulty were felt then, and I think justly felt, your Lordships will at once understand how infinitely greater are the difficulty and the evil existing at the present time. If you will indulge me with your attention for a few moments, I will describe the exact value, authority, and weight which reported decisions—that is to say, precedents—have in the schools of English law, and the exact manner in which their authority is sometimes admitted to almost an extravagant extent, and at other times denied, in courts of justice. The law on the subject may be explained in very few words, both with regard to the authority of decisions in particular cases resembling them, and their authority for the purpose of determining new cases when they arise. Lord Coke says, "Our book-cases are the best proofs of what the law is." Chief Justice Best says, "The judgments of the Courts of Westminster Hall are the only authority that we have for by far the greater part of the law of England." Chief Justice Tindal, an honoured name, in a very recent case in this House, said, "Decisions of the courts of common law are at once the best expositors and the surest evidence of the common law itself." The doctrine of Mr. Justice Blackstone is, that precedents and rules must be followed, unless they are flatly absurd and unjust. Lord Wensleydale says, "In our system of judicature we are bound by precedents, and by the authority of previous cases, unless they are plainly and manifestly founded on erroneous principles." Now, I beg the House to observe the enormous contradiction which is contained in these enunciations and principles, particularly when those principles depend upon the rule being extracted from such an infinite number of varying and discordant cases. The rule of the great commentator is, that a precedent may be rejected when it is absurd and unjust. The rule of Lord Wensleydale is, that precedents must be followed, unless they are plainly founded on erroneous principles. The result, therefore, is, that each succeeding judge has it in his power to determine what is absurd, what is unjust, what is the measure of unjust principles. Now, this is not the only evil inherent in the present system, for there is another necessarily inherent in that system, and it is this—in the language of Lord Bacon—that the unlearned age governs the more learned, because you take your rule as it is laid down in an early and undeveloped stage of society, and you are compelled to abide by that rule, if, for instance, it has regulated the disposition of property, until the Legislature intervenes to rescue the law from the necessity of following that which is often unreasonable and absurd. But the contradiction and anomaly do not end there; and I will venture to render this plain to your Lordships by citing one or two instances of the manner in which decided cases are occasionally dealt with by courts of justice. Your Lordships have all repeatedly heard of "the glorious uncertainty of the law." It is the common opprobrium of our system, and has passed into a proverb, and the saying has taken its rise in the fact that no man can tell with certainty whether a particular case which he finds recorded, and which is supposed to govern the particular case in which he is interested, will or will not be followed by the judges. Now, let me justify these words by some examples which I have taken without much research, because they came immediately to hand. Others more striking, I dare say, might easily be found. The Court of Queen's Bench, in 1801, when it was constituted of judges of great reputation, speaking of a single case which had been decided by the same Court only three years before, disapproved it, and yet considered the case before them as concluded by its authority, and that the matter having passed in rem judicatum, the merits could not now be entered into. On another occasion Lord Ellenborough said, "With a decided case exactly in point, it would be extraordinary if we were to apply a different rule of construction, although, if it were to be decided now for the first time, I should not think that decision right." In many instances the language is, "It is better stare decisis; the very case has already been determined." Lord Eldon says, "Where there is a decision precisely in point it is better to follow it." In a multitude of cases the authority of a single case, though not fully approved, has governed judicial decisions. The language used is, "although, if the matter were res integra, it might admit of difficulty;" or, "although the doctrine is not founded on good sense," or "not bottomed in reason," or, "although the Court cannot approve or cannot understand the reasons," yet the authority of the case must be followed; and courts no longer reason on the rule, but adhere to it. On the other hand, a single case is frequently overruled, although it is declared that "no case can be entitled to more respect," or that it is a case to which "the Court looks with great respect," or that it is "a deliberate judgment," because the Court cannot conceive the principles upon which the decision is founded. Sometimes the Court says of a decided case, that it stands altogether by itself, and sometimes the antecedent decision is tossed aside in a rude manner, as where Lord Ellenborough says, "The case, as referred to, has had its day, and it is time it should cease." These things are not to be lightly regarded, because your Lordships will be kind enough to remember what is the position of the lawyer who is called upon for his opinion. A case is laid by a client before his adviser. The latter searches in his books of precedents. He finds that a particular case had been decided which he thinks will govern the one submitted to him, and he gives his opinion accordingly. Then he goes into court, and finds to his astonishment that the case may be treated either for or against his client in the manner I have described; the result being, that it is impossible to predicate with any degree of satisfaction or of certainty beforehand what will be the issue of the case. Now, is that a condition in which the law of the land should stand? Is this a condition in which what is denominated a science should be permitted to remain? But there is a further and a great peculiarity in the law of England, which is this:—By a legal fiction it is supposed that the law contains within itself the materials for the decision of every case, however novel in its circumstances; and accordingly, when the judges have a new case before them, they do not profess to arrive at the law by reasoning, by theory, or by philosophical inquiry, but they profess to discover it by searching among the records of former decisions for cases which are supposed to be analogous to the case before them; and they derive from these analogies the rule which they desire for the determination of the particular case. I will refer your Lordships to the words of two of our most eminent judges explanatory of the mode of reason adopted by them for the determination of new cases. It was described by Chief Justice Tindal, in an elaborate case which occurred in your Lordships' House, where the circumstances were new, and the relation had not previously existed, and accordingly where new principles and modes of interpretation had to be discovered. On that occasion he said:—

"I think it a safer course on this occasion, as I find has been the opinion of other judges from the earliest period of the law, to adhere to any rule that can be inferred from the cases rather than to institute another, although another rule may appear upon general principles more reasonable and just."

No doubt, Chief Justice Tindal spoke in the spirit of the law in which he was educated, and which he was bound to administer. But I leave it to your Lordships to consider whether it be advisable to continue to grope among the records of ancient cases until you find something similar, and to adopt new rules, not existing rules, be it observed, but new rules that can be inferred from old cases, although other rules would be warranted by right and reason. Lord Wensleydale followed the Chief Justice, and he described the mode of procedure in new cases in these words:—

"This case, therefore, is, in some sense, new, as many others are which continually occur, but we have no right to consider it, because it is new, as one for which the law has not provided at all; or, because it has not yet been decided—to decide it for ourselves according to our own judgment of what is just and expedient. Our common-law system consists in applying to new combinations of circumstances those rules of law which we derive from legal principles and judicial precedents; and, for the sake of attaining uniformity, consistency, and certainty, we must apply those rules, when they are not plainly unreasonable and inconvenient, to all cases which arise."

We are, therefore, led, whenever society gives birth to new combinations of circumstances, to the duty and obligation of finding the rules which are applicable from such analogy as can be drawn from previous decided cases. Let your Lordships bear in mind the huge bulk of these 1100 volumes, and observe what an impossible, what an uncertain task it must be to find out from the chaos the materials for decisions on new cases. It is impossible to tell beforehand what may be the decision. But a judicial opinion is also a legislative enactment. It decides a particular case, and it sets a precedent for all future cases. Therefore, the judges become legislators—legislators ex arbitrio, and, with this vast variety of material from which to select, what an impossibility for any one to ascertain beforehand the nature of the decision that will be come to. This is no idle statement nor exaggerated picture. Let me bring it home to all your Lordships' recollections by a simple narrative of what occurred the other day. Your Lordships remember when the railway mania was rife numerous companies were formed. Each company was initiated or formed by a provisional committee, who were appointed to take the necessary steps to bring the scheme into practical operation. Liabilities were incurred to a large extent, services were performed, goods were ordered, lawyers and surveyors were employed, and the liabilities of these committees were very serious. Many persons who had merely lent their names because they had been solicited to do so, found that actions were brought against them, although they had not participated in the acts which led to the debt for which they were sued. It was a new case, and the question arose how was it to be dealt with. For years it was held that the only analogy to this system was that of partnership, and, therefore, as a provisional committee most resembled a partnership, all the rules applicable to partnership were applied to these provisional committees. As we know, one partner is the agent of, and may bind another partner in all matters relating to the partnership; consequently it was held that the provisional committees who concurred in giving orders did by those acts bind other committees who knew nothing of the transaction. The result was, that hundreds were ruined. The liabilities thus created were of enormous extent, and many persons were obliged to leave the country, but at last it occurred to an eminent judge, a member of your Lordships' House, to question the analogy, and then it turned out that there was nothing of legal resemblance between a provisional committee and a partnership. Then happened that which is continually occurring in this country. There was a flow of the tide one way, to be succeeded by a revulsion another way, and the reflux wave consequent upon the alteration of the judicial decision in its turn brought ruin to many who had trusted to the former exposition of the law. That is an example of the evil consequences of men being left without rudder, without light, without compass or chart, in traversing the immense sea of judicial precedent whenever a new combination of circumstances arises. But those among your Lordships who are thoroughly conversant with the subject—and they are many—will perceive the gross logical error committed by lawyers in the use they make of the word "analogy." In the vocabulary of lawyers, "analogy" means nothing but resemblance, and accordingly, their argument is something like this—"My Lord, this case is like the case of A. against B." To which the other side replies, "No, it is more like the case of C. against D." It has been properly said that the pleading of lawyers is nothing but a competition of falsely styled analogies. All this arises because the materials for competition and argument are of that loose, indefinite, and uncertain character which I have described. But even that is not the full extent of the evil. It is not merely that the materials are of this vast indefinite extent, it is not merely because the application to them is so uncertain, it is not because they are sometimes weighed in one scale and sometimes in another, but there exists in English law a defect which will surprise your Lordships to know. It is competent to counsel when arguing a case to produce to the judge a mere manuscript decision, something that has never been printed nor published, and which no one has ever heard of before. He produces it from his pocket-book, or the judge produces it from his pocket-book, and that is the law of England. So, when a case has been considered and matured for decision, proceeding upon what is printed and known to all, suddenly there springs up some manuscript authority, and all former reasons are entirely subverted, and the judge yields to the force of what has been just put forward. One remarkable decision of a very eminent judge, who had arrived at a carefully considered opinion, dictated by principle and by facts, was suddenly overborne by a manuscript note of a case previously decided, which will be found reported in 18 Vesey's Reports. Surely no one thinks that the law of England ought to remain in the state which I have described. In what way, then, is the change to be made? To those who like precedents, I can refer to the precedent of Lord Bacon, on the proposal to amend the laws of England, who describes exactly the work which it is my hope I shall be enabled to be the means of initiating, and which it will be the fortune of those who succeed me to continue. The first thing to be done with these reports is to revise and to expurgate them, to weed them of decisions that are in contradiction with one another; where there are opposing decisions, to settle those which ought to remain; to cleanse out and to get rid of all matters that are not warranted by the present state of the law, and to divide the reports into three classes. The first class would include all the old reports to the end of the seventeenth century; the second would include the reports of the eighteenth century to the death of George III; and the third would include the reports to the present time. I trust I may be successful in obtaining a commission that may be directed for the purpose of accomplishing these objects. As to the old reports, I propose that we should preserve the conclusions properly come to; that in the second period we should weed the reports of what is useless, and retain only those cases which are fit to be used as precedents; and to perform a similar work in respect of cases of the present time. The result will be, a body of recorded precedents brought into a moderate compass, and occupying, we may estimate, but a tenth of the bulk of the present reports. The law thus purified and refined, the grounds of contradiction, if not entirely removed, will be materially reduced, and a much more satisfactory state of things will be the result. Such is the present state of the common law. I now turn for a few moments to the corresponding state of the statute law, for there is a remarkable similarity between them. The statute law is contained in forty-three or forty-four thick quarto volumes, commencing with the 20th of Henry III. They are printed without the least regard to order; there is no system or arrangement in regard to them. They are printed just as they had been passed chronologically. There is, of course, great variety of subject, enactments on the same subject being dispersed and scattered over an immense extent of ground. Unfortunately, our legislation has been extempore. We wait till a grievance is intolerable, and then we apply ourselves to a remedy. Our legislation has always been on the spur of the moment; nay, more, it unfortunately happens that the manner in which the legislation is conducted contributes more than anything else to the evils so palpably on the surface of the statute-book. You have no persons to assist you who are trained or educated in the great work of legislative composition. But legislative composition is one of the most difficult things that can be conceived. When you address yourselves to a new statute, after having considered the manner in which it has been brought in, it is subjected to the process of committee, and it constantly happens that things are grafted upon a statute, under misconception, at variance altogether from the original conception of the framer. There are patches constantly put on the old garment. You provide for the emergency, but you pay not the least regard to the question whether the piece you put in the old garment suits it or not. Such being the mode of your legislation, it would be utterly impossible that your statute-book should be other than it is—a mass of enactments and of statutes which are in a great degree discordant and irreconcilable. Hence the utter impossibility frequently of arriving at a consistent interpretation. This, then, being the state of the law and of the statute-book, what I propose is the course dictated by natural good sense, that it shall be revised and expurgated—weeding away all those enactments that are no longer in force, and arranging and classifying what is left under proper heads, bringing the dispersed statutes together, eliminating jarring and discordant enactments, and thus getting a harmonious whole, instead of having, as at present, a chaos of inconsistent and contradictory enactments. With that view, we have, with considerable care, and, I am sorry to say, after a longer period of time than I had desired, examined the whole of the statute roll from the 20 Henry III down to the end of the eighteenth century. [So we understood the noble and learned Lord, who occasionally was quite inaudible in the gallery.] The statutes that are weeded out may be described as those which are no longer applicable to the modern state of society—enactments which have become wholly obsolete—enactments which have been repealed by obscure and indirect processes, which is one of the evils with which we have to contend, because it perpetually happens that a particular enactment is, in effect, repealed without its being said so by the indirect process of another general law. Sometimes it is repealed by the introduction of another inconsistent rule; and while these things prevail, until they are extirpated from the statute-book, they are constantly the cause of uncertainty. I may just bring to your recollection how common it is in a modern act of Parliament to say, "All former enactments inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed." Or you repeal so much of an act as relates to such and such a matter. It is often extremely difficult to determine what is included in the words "relating to." We have endeavoured to apply a remedy to this state of things. The task was one of great difficulty and delicacy. The reason for every alteration will be found in the schedule given opposite to the description of the enactment to which it applies. This was done in order that this work might be accomplished with something like that certainty and assurance of safety with which work of this kind ought always to be gone into. You should be perfectly satisfied of the accuracy of the conclusion, that the particular enactment which is supposed to be swept away comes within the general clause of expired, obsolete, inconsistent, or repealed enactments. In carrying out this plan, of course it becomes most desirable to preserve intact all those ancient monuments of our legislation connected with our political rights and institutions, on which no man should lay his unhallowed hands. Those statutes, which may be considered to have become stones in the edifice of the Constitution, are preserved wholly intact; and no enactment or statute is touched that may be considered to have entered into the common law, or formed the foundation of any rule of practice or procedure, or may be referred to as the basis on which the right or title of property is made to rest. Such a work required great care and circumspection, so that in the process of excision no existing right should be impaired. When this is done, when the statute-book has been cleared of superfluous and unnecessary matter, I hope to propose that another process be gone through to which the previous observance is merely introductory. The enactments spread throughout the statute-book relating to different subjects must be brought together in a collected form. I should, propose, therefore, to have a systematic classification of the subject-matter of your legislation, preserving, however, the order of time, because the order of time in regard to enactments is most material for the proper understanding of the law, but arranging the different portions of the statute-book under appropriate heads, so as to present an accurate and methodical analysis of the law comprised under each head. And I hope, concurrently with this, that the corresponding parts of the common law extracted from the reports may be added, so that in that shape you may have a digest of the present law, both common and statute. I use the word "digest" advisedly, because your Lordships may frequently hear any procedure of this kind described as an approach to codification. Now, I am not at all disposed to disguise my own individual opinion, that it is to the form of a code that the law of any advanced nation ought ultimately to be reduced; but I am not at all prepared to say that the law of England is now in such a state that it may be codified with advantage and success, and for this reason, that a codification of law is the last result which it attains when it has been perfected and has reached its maturity. But if law is still in a transitory condition it is not fit for that process. I regard the state of the English law as still transitory, because you have still in it the relics of barbarous times; you have still got that absurd division between the province of common law and the province of equity, not that distinction which is inherent in the nature of things between the written statute and the equity required for its just application, but two antagonistic systems; because, my Lords, you still have cases which would be decided one way on one side of Westminster Hall, and another way on the other side of Westminster Hall. Therefore, until you have got over that, and are in a condition to tell your statesmen and jurists that there is now but one rule in the law of England, and but one form of procedure, a rule is not known to be certain, and your procedure is likewise uncertain. Until you have attained to that, which the process of digestion will, I hope, facilitate, and of which it will be the introduction, you are not in a position to approach the formation of a code. Neither are you in a position to approach the framing of a code until you have got among the body of your lawyers that which is still wanting, viz. that precision of language—that accuracy of legislative construction and composition, which would be the means of framing acts of Parliaments and portions of your law with more simplicity, clearness, and exactness than at present characterise any of your attempts at legislation. It is remarkable, that the original proposal made in the reign of Edward VI, with regard to the improvement of our statute law, is thus recorded by Bishop Burnett in his History of the Reformation, vol. II. Speaking of a plan for the amendment of the law, sent up by the Commons to the Lords in 1549, he says:—

"It was proposed that the common and statute laws should be, in imitation of the Roman laws, digested into a body under titles and heads, and put in good Latin. But this was too great a design to be set on foot or finished under an infant king."

The subject of the consolidation and expurgation of the statutes of this country was also brought forward again and again in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. Sir Nicholas Bacon proposed, in a few words, that "the acts should be digested into titles," and expressed the same thing as I have, in a greater number of words, described as the systematic classification of enactments according to their subjects. Lord Bacon, in his last address to King James, uses his attempts in this direction as an argument for the mitigation of his punishment. In 1650 a committee was appointed by Parliament "to revise all former statutes and ordinances now in force, and consider as well which are fit to be continued, altered, or repealed, and how the same may be reduced into a compendious way and exact method." The same thing was repeated in 1653, when a committee was appointed "to consider of a new model or body of the law;" but the most definite resolution was that which was passed by your Lordships' House in 1816, in which, after conference with the other House of Parliament, your Lordships embodied your opinion of what was necessary, with regard to the statute law, in the following words:—

"That from the present state of the statute law of this realm, it is highly expedient that effectual measures should be taken to arrange the matters contained in the statutes of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and in the statutes passed in the separate Parliaments of England, Scotland, and Ireland respectively, under distinct and proper heads."

That resolution, I am sorry to say, has not been acted upon. It stands upon record as a monument of what this House, after deliberation and consultation with the other House, determined ought to be done in this matter. Undoubtedly this task requires a great deal more labour than the weak force placed at my disposal under the grant made by Parliament could accomplish. But, my Lords, the work that has been done has been the work of several years; yet you will not be surprised at that period having been occupied by it, when I tell you that the services of two gentlemen only are at the command of the Lord Chancellor and the law officers of the Crown, and those two gentlemen receive such inadequate salaries, that they are enabled to give up only such hours to this employment as they can subtract from their ordinary professional avocations. I hope and trust, that in the debates on this measure it will be the opinion of the Houses that this proposal ought, both with respect to the common and the statute law, to be prosecuted with effect. If it be prosecuted with effect, I should hope that the process of revision and expurgation will not take much more than another year, and then the arrangement and classification of the different subjects of our enactments may be proceeded with. In that way we may expect to have the body of our statutes relieved from the chaotic state of disorder in which it now stands. I trust, my Lords, that the commission will also direct its inquiries into another important point, because it is of no use to reduce, expurgate, methodise, and arrange that which exists, unless we have a means of preventing the recurrence of the evils which now exist. If your Lordships should confirm that view, I shall undoubtedly at some future time ask you to give me a committee for the purpose of ascertaining what is the best mode by which the future legislation of this country may be conducted, so as to secure an improved form in the composition of bills. When the task of expurgating and classifying the statutes has been completed, it will still be necessary to adopt some system for revising the enormous amount of accumulated decisions, so as to check the uncertainty and confusion they introduce into the law. For, observe the manner in which error grows up in the law. A case is decided, say by a Vice-Chancellor or by one of the courts at Westminster. The decision may be bad, but one of the parties to the litigation may not have the means of appealing against it, and so it is not corrected by a higher court. Then this bad law is recorded in the reports, and passes unnoticed for three or four years. It is then cited as a precedent before another judge. That other judge says, "I find that Mr. Justice A. B., or Mr. Vice-Chancellor C. D. decided a case, from which the case now before me cannot be distinguished;" and thus a bad precedent is accepted and confirmed. The thing, therefore, becomes inveterate, and bad law is established, there being in our system no agency at all to exercise that which ought to be exercised, viz. an annual revision of the reported cases, with power to determine what is to be regarded as entitled to authority, and what ought not to be quoted hereafter for the purpose of determining the law. All this might be accomplished by what is called the institution of a Department of Justice. At all events, there ought to be some mode and power of revising these reports from time to time, as long as you adhere to the practice of making them guides for judicial decisions. I could say much more on this difficult and important subject, but I am afraid I have already trespassed too long upon the time of your Lordships. I trust I have not given any exaggerated or distorted account of the evils which require to be remedied. In the works of our best and most philosophical jurists those evils are forcibly depicted as matters loudly calling for legislative interference. It is with the utmost confidence that I submit the Bill which I now hold in my hand to your Lordships, and I earnestly hope that you will not allow this attempt to deal with a question of paramount importance to be added to the failures of 1816 and other years.

Lord Brougham, Lord Cranworth, and Lord Kingsdown addressed the House, and the Lord Chancellor having made some observations in reply, the bill was read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday, June 15.

The Innkeepers' Liability Bill was read a third time, and passed.

Wednesday, June 17.

Lord Raynham obtained leave to bring in a bill for the protection of young persons under the age of sixteen years, engaged as domestic servants, and apprentices.

Also a bill to regulate corporal punishment in schools and elsewhere.

PEAR on RIGHTS of WATER.
In 8vo., price 5s. cloth.
A TREATISE on RIGHTS of WATER, including Public and Private Rights to the Sea and Sea-shore. By J. B.
PEAR, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law, Senior Fellow of Clare College, Cambridge.
"The work is extremely well done."—Law Times, April 22, 1850.
"A student anxious to gain a general idea of the intricate, though rather narrow, subject of the particular class of easements to which Mr.
Pear's little treatise is devoted, could not possibly have pleasanter or better guidance than is afforded by these pages; nor could anything more suggestive of broad and scientific views be offered to readers of mature acquirements."—Solicitors' Journal, Jan. 1, 1859.

DOWDESWELL and J. G. MALCOLM, Esqrs., Barristers at Law.
In 1 vol. royal 8vo., 1853, price 1l. 16s. cloth.
In the parliamentary debate on disqualified witnesses (House of Commons, Feb. 12, 1861), referring to the case of Maden v. Catnach, Sir G. C. Lewis said, "He would read from Starkie on Evidence, which was known to be a standard work upon the subject, a statement of the law as applicable to the case (vide Examination as to Religious Belief, pp. 115, 116). That is a clear statement of the rule of law upon the subject."

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 27, 1863.

THE doctrines of equity, by which innovations have been made, and often most justly made, upon rules of common law, are generally of progressive growth; and points are frequently arising for the decision of the Court of Chancery, which one might have thought would have been clearly determined one way or another, during a former century; take, for instance, the doctrine of the courts of equity, upon the equity of a married woman to a settlement out of her own property. The common law, which gives the husband so large an interest in the property of his wife, in consideration of the obligation which, upon marriage, he contracts, of maintaining her and his children by her, takes no steps to insure the performance of this duty; for not only has he in many cases power to alien his wife's property, but also, upon his becoming bankrupt or insolvent, it vests in his assignees for the benefit of his creditors.

The court of equity first interposed in favour of the wife, when the husband, or those claiming under him, applied to the court to obtain possession of the property of the wife. The Court, however, considered that it was not right to give its assistance unless a settlement was made of part of the property, at the instance of the wife. In these cases the Court acted upon the old maxim, "that he who seeks equity must do equity."

Whatever, however, may have been the origin of this equitable doctrine, and although it was at one time thought that the wife could only claim a settlement in those cases where the husband, or those claiming under him, sought the assistance of the Court to obtain possession of her property, (Bosvill v. Brandon, 1 P. Wms. 460), it was afterwards decided, in Lady Elibank v. Montolieu (5 Ves. 737), that the wife might file a bill to assert her right to a settlement.

This right might be defeated at any time before a bill was filed, by the husband obtaining possession of the property, whether it was handed over to him by the Court, by trustees, or others.

Another singularity in the doctrine of courts of equity upon this subject is, that whenever the wife asserted a right to a settlement for herself, she was bound at the same time to claim that its benefit should be extended to her children. But inasmuch as the right to the settlement was personal to herself, she might, at any time before the settlement was actually made, waive her right to it, and thus defeat the interests which her children would otherwise have taken under it. (Hodgens v. Hodgens, 11 Bligh, N. S., 104).

A very important question then arose, of this kind; assuming that a bill had been filed, and that the wife had died without waiving her right to a settlement, at what time, and under what circumstances, did the right of the children to insist upon the benefit of the wife's equity to a settlement attach?

In the first place, it was clearly settled, that where the wife had entered into a contract for a settlement upon herself and her children, or had obtained a decree for a settlement, her death before the execution of a settlement, without having waived her right to it would not prejudice the claims of her children. (Lloyd v. Williams, 1 Mad. 467; Lady Elibank v. Montolieu, 5 Ves. 737; Murray v. Lord Elibank, 10 Ves. 348; Lloyd v. Mason, 5 Hare, 149).

Suppose, however, that a bill has been filed, and the wife dies before a decree, without having claimed or waived her equity, can the children then insist upon a settlement? Sir J. Leach, in Steinmetz v. Halthin (1 Gl. & Ja. 65), thought they could. In that case a bill had been filed by trustees for the administration of the trust property, and a married woman, entitled to part of it, died before decree, and without having put in her answer; nevertheless his Honor held, that, on the bill being filed, the equity of the wife attached upon the property, and that her death pending the suit, without having waived her equity, though before answer, gave to the children an immediate title to the provision that the wife would have acquired if living. The decision of Sir J. Leach in Steinmetz v. Halthin has, however, been overruled by the subsequent cases of De La Garde v. Lempriere (6 Beav. 344) and Baker v. Bayldon (8 Hare, 210), in both of which cases the bill had been filed against the wife, and she had died before having claimed any settlement, and before any decree had been made for one.

These decisions leave untouched the question whether, when the wife herself, as plaintiff, files a bill claiming a settlement, and dies before a decree, but without having waived her right, her children can nevertheless insist upon a settlement. In the recent case of Wallace v. Auldjo, heard on the 25th and 26th May, 1863, Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., decided adversely to the claim of the children. There, it seems, the plaintiff Mrs. Auldjo, as one of the next of kin of a deceased brother, was entitled to the sum of 2000*l.*, then in the hands of his administrator. In August, 1861, Mrs. Wallace filed a bill against her husband and the administrator of her brother, praying a settlement out of the 2000*l.* The defendants appeared to the bill; and subsequently some negotiations with a view to an arrangement took place. On the 19th November, 1861, before anything had been settled, Mrs. Wallace died. On the 30th June, 1862, the children filed a supplemental bill, asking a declaration that Mrs. Wallace was entitled to a settlement on herself and her children, out of her share as next of kin of her deceased brother, and for an injunction to restrain the transfer of the fund to the husband. His Honor dismissed the bill, with costs, and he seems to have come to the conclusion he did upon the ground, that since Mrs. Wallace died before decree, although after a bill filed by her, no trust was impressed upon the property at her death, and that, therefore, the children were not entitled to enforce their equity.

If this decision be supported, it may, perhaps, be laid down as a general proposition, that in the absence of contract, the equity to a settlement, whether the bill be filed against or by the wife, and although she by her bill or answer claims a settlement, does not attach until a decree has been obtained directing a settlement to be made.

It is, perhaps, to be regretted, that the court of equity in framing its practice on this subject, did not lay down a different rule, so that the equity might attach at an earlier period.

In many cases the doctrine of a wife's equity to a settlement is highly beneficial to her and her family, and the jurisdiction of the Court may be exercised without giving any cause of complaint to the husband or those claiming under him.

It would, we think, have been a far more convenient rule to have laid down, that the equity should in all cases attach when the claim of the wife was made—for instance, when she filed a bill claiming a settlement, that her right should attach on the filing of the bill; when the bill was filed against her, then that the right to a settlement should attach upon her claiming it by her answer, or by her counsel in court.

The rule as laid down by Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., if adhered to, must, as in Wallace v. Auldjo, give rise to great inconvenience and injustice. For instance, take the case of a married woman dangerously ill, who, in consequence of the misconduct or improvidence of a spendthrift and immoral husband, is most anxious to obtain a settlement for the sake of her children: if she happen to die before a decree, according to the present practice, as laid down by Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., the whole costs of the proceedings are utterly thrown away, and the fear of such a result may often prevent proceedings being taken.

It may, doubtless, be said, that the jurisdiction which the court of equity has assumed is an interference with the legal rights of the husband, and that his chance of getting his wife's property discharged of her equity, by surviving her, before it is enforced, should not be lightly interfered with. The answer to this, we consider, is plain: the Court in all cases where it directs a settlement of the wife's property to be made, interferes with the legal right of the husband; the extent of its interference is one merely of degree. By enforcing a settlement after the death of the wife in favour of the children, in all cases where it has been claimed by the wife, and not only where she has obtained a decree, the Court would violate no principle of its own. Whether it would by so doing act contrary to its own practice, we propose at some future time, by a more minute examination of the authorities, to consider.

ATKINSON v. HOLBY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Whether the strictures of your correspondent "G. L." on the House of Lords as a court of appeal be just or not, I cannot but think that the decision of that Court in the case of Atkinson v. Holby (9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 503), which has been selected by him to illustrate its inefficiency, is a most unfortunate choice for the support of your correspondent's charge.

Of two "well-considered" judgments, that of the House of Lords is, I venture to say, not only more in accordance with the words of the devise in question, but more agreeable to authority, than the very lucid, but to me inconclusive, judgment of Sir G. J. Turner, L. J.

There is no conflict between the two tribunals as to the possibility of implying an estate tail. They agree, that such an implication must arise; but while the lower Court places the estate tail in the great grandchildren, the House of Lords, affirming a decision of the Master of the Rolls, places it in the grandchildren of the testator.

Now, "G. L." lays down a principle, which he says governs this case, and which he describes as one "referring default of issue to the objects of the preceding devise, if in fee-simple or in fee-tail, provided such objects be not one or two of a class;" and although he feels supported by many clear authorities, he selects the cases of Ginger & White v. White (Willes, 348) and Fees v. Leggs (3 Burn. & E. 488) as illustrations of the principle which he has thus defined.

I confess I am unable to deduce from these cases any such general rule as "G. L." has drawn. In the first of the two cases, an estate tail is certainly implied, but on grounds totally irrespective of any reference to the words denoting failure of issue, which, indeed, occurred in the devise then in question, but which were construed to refer, not to issue of any prior devisees, but to the prior devisees themselves.

In the latter case, an estate tail was implied in consequence of the remainderman being himself one of the "heirs" in default of whom his estate was to arise, "heirs" being there read "heirs of the body."

In truth, the difficulty in most of the cases which are usually cited in questions similar to that in the case of Atkinson v. Holby, has been in deciding whether the word "issue" refers to the prior devisees who have been mentioned in the devise, or to their descendants. Now, in the present instance no such question can arise; the words of the devise are distinct—"in default of issue by my said granddaughters;" and the simpler rule, forming the first ground of Lord Chelmsford's judgment, by which an estate tail is conferred on the prior devisees, whose issue appears, from the words of the will, to be objects of the testator's bounty, is, I conceive, that which ought, and which did, govern the ultimate decision in this case.

The granddaughters are the first takers of the devised estates; their issue is to be exhausted before the devise over is to take effect; by conferring on them estates tail, the usual mode by which the law can best carry out such an intent is adopted.

Your obedient servant,

25, Old-square, Lincoln's-inn. J. B. S.

EXAMINATIONS AT THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

TRINITY TERM, 1863.

INTERMEDIATE EXAMINATION.

THE EXAMINERS reported that the following gentlemen, whose names are arranged in alphabetical order, have passed the intermediate examination with distinction:—

George Henry Blunt, aged nineteen, articled to Mr. William Freer, of Leicester.

Edmund John Thomas Judge Mourilyan, aged twenty-one, articled to Messrs. Boys & Tweedies, of London.

Frederick Nalder, aged eighteen, articled to Mr. Frank Isaac Nalder, of Shepton Mallet.

The number of candidates examined in this term was seventy-four; of these, seventy-two were passed, and two postponed.

By order of the Council,

E. W. WILLIAMSON, Secretary.

FINAL EXAMINATION.

AT the examination of candidates for admission on the roll of attorneys and solicitors of the Superior Courts, the Examiners recommended the following gentlemen, under the age of twenty-six, as being entitled to honorary distinction:—

Water Webb, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Hughes, Hooker, & Buttanshaw, of London.

The Council of the Incorporated Law Society have accordingly awarded to Mr. Webb the prize of books presented by the Hon. Society of Clifford's-inn.

The Council have also awarded to each of the undermentioned gentlemen, whose names are placed in alphabetical order, a prize of books given by the Incorporated Law Society:—

Charles Edward Bretherton, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Mr. Edward Bretherton, of Liverpool; and Mr. Alfred Benjamin Carpenter, of London.

Thomas William Henry Hallam, aged twenty-five, who served his clerkship to Mr. Robert Leonard the younger, of Bristol; Mr. Lewis Fry, of Bristol; and Mr. Richard Smith, of London.

John William Pye-Smith the younger, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Pye-Smith & Wightman, of Sheffield; and Messrs. Torr, Janeway, & Tagart, of London.

Joseph Edward Turner, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. Orlando Webb, of London.

The Examiners have also certified that the following candidates, whose names are placed in alphabetical order, passed examinations which entitle them to commendation:—

Henry Johnson Carr, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Upton & Yewdall, of Leeds; and Messrs. Few & Co., of London.

William Cooper, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Carson, Ellis, & Field, of Liverpool.

George Sangster Green, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. Mark Jameson, of London.

John Charles Hardy, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Cree & Law, of London.

John Edward Gray Hill, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Gregory, Skirrow, & Rowcliffe, of London; and Messrs. Phillips, of Plymouth.

William Ramwell, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. Alphonso Rowland Varley, of Bolton-le-Moors; and Messrs. Mackeson & Goldring, of London.

James Hamilton Townend, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. Charles Sawbridge, of London.

The Council have accordingly awarded them certificates of merit.

The Examiners have further announced to the following candidates, whose names are placed in alphabetical order, that their answers to the questions at the examination were highly satisfactory, and would have entitled them to prizes or certificates of merit if they had been under the age of twenty-six:—

John Robinson Adams, aged thirty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. James Matthews, of London.

George Arthur Books, aged twenty-eight, who served his clerkship to Mr. Thomas Lee, of London.

Charles Sheppard, aged twenty-nine, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Hookley & Baker, of Guildford; and Messrs. Hookley & Russell, of Guildford.

Horace William Smith, M.A., aged thirty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. James Crowdy, of London.

Frederick Stroud, aged twenty-seven, who served his clerkship to Mr. Charles John Cheeshyre, of Cheltenham; and Messrs. Aldridge & Bromley, of London.

The number of candidates examined in this term was 147; of these 131 were passed, and 16 postponed.

By order of the Council,

E. W. WILLIAMSON, Secretary.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday, June 16.

ASSIZE AND CIRCUIT ARRANGEMENTS.

Mr. M'Mahon, in rising to move a resolution, "That it is expedient to make such alterations in the assize and circuit arrangements as would secure a more speedy trial in the country of country causes," said, his aim was to carry out the objects of the commission of 1857, which had inquired into the subject, and had made several recommendations, by giving to the country districts and to towns more frequent opportunities of trying their causes. In the country there were but two assizes in the year, while in London and Middlesex there were no less than ninety-six sittings—thirty-two for each of the three courts; so that a suitor in Middlesex had forty-eight times more opportunities of having his case tried than the suitor over the river, in the county of Surrey. In matters under 50*l.*, too, Parliament had taken care to provide that there should be twelve sittings in the year. Having referred to the Great Charter, which provided that trials of ejectments and other local causes should take place four times a year, and to the statute of Edward I and others, which provided that there should be three assizes in the year, to shew that the system was new, the hon. and learned gentleman proceeded to point out that the present arrangements caused great dissatisfaction in the country, and that complaints were very frequent among country suitors—that they had to wait half a year for the trial of their causes, or were put to great expense in bringing them up to London. It was of the utmost importance that parties should not be obliged to go to a great distance from home to have their causes tried, inasmuch as it had been clearly shewn that in cases in which witnesses had to be taken more than thirty miles the costs of a trial were doubled. If that inconvenience were obviated, the saving which would as a result be effected would more than counterbalance the expense of increasing the number of judges, which, of course, it would be necessary to do, if the recommendation of the commission which sat on the subject were acted upon, and additional assize accommodation provided in Yorkshire and other places which stood in need of the change. At the time the commission had made its report there was an impression that the common-law judges had not very much work to do, and it was even contended that their number ought to be diminished. The fact was, however, that the business in the superior courts had so increased, from various causes, that the judges had now more work than ever to get through, the result being, that scarcely any of the courts in Westminster had its full complement of judges available, some of them being obliged to sit in the Divorce Court, or to attend at the Privy Council, or elsewhere. Indeed, the great wonder was, seeing how wide was the extent of their duties, that the number of judges had not long since been increased. In England, which possessed the largest commercial and manufacturing population in the world, we had only fifteen common-law judges, whereas in Ireland—where, in his opinion, the number of judges was far from being too large—there were twelve judges, although the population was so much less; the number in the superior courts of Scotland being thirteen to a population of only 3,000,000. Now, nothing could be worse in a country than that its judges should be obliged to get hurriedly through their work; for, according to the old maxim, "Haste was the mother of injustice;" and everybody, he believed, but the Chancellor of the Exchequer, was satisfied that the number of judges in England ought to be increased. The expense of creating additional judges would not be more than 10,000*l.* a year, while that expense would be more than made up for by the saving which might be effected as a consequence of the augmented facilities which would be given for trying causes in Yorkshire and Lancashire alone. The inconvenience of the present system bore with especial hardship, he believed, on the inhabitants of Yorkshire, who had to go great distances to York to have their causes tried. Now, when we were about to expend so large a sum on providing a refuge for all the animals in the British Museum, it was not, he thought, unreasonable to ask that some 10,000*l.* or 12,000*l.* a year should be laid out in securing the services of a few more judges to meet the wants of the country, in the direction to which his motion pointed. In 1857 it was intended to issue a commission for the trial of causes at the winter assize in Yorkshire; but that intention was abandoned in consequence, as was stated, of Lord Campbell having "informed the Secretary of State, that the judges were of opinion that parties would not be properly prepared for the trial of civil causes in December." The only difficulty really was the want of more judges, and he hoped that the public would not be deprived of the accommodation which was so much needed on account of the small additional expense which such an increase would occasion. The hon. member concluded by moving the resolution.

Mr. Hadfield, in seconding the motion, was complaining of the inconvenience occasioned to the people of Sheffield by their having to go fifty-five miles to try prisoners or causes at York, when

An Hon. Member noticed that there were not forty members present.

The Speaker counted, but a number of members had come in, and a House was made.

Mr. Hadfield, in continuation, dwelt upon the importance of such a re-arrangement of assize business as would effect the improvement contemplated by the motion of the hon. and learned member for Wexford.

Mr. Baines supported the motion. He said that the population of Yorkshire amounted to 2,000,000, upwards of three-fourths of whom resided in the West Riding; and the small number of assizes there, and the few places in which they were held, amounted to a great substantial grievance and hardship. The vast amount of manufacturing and commercial transactions necessarily led to a great deal of legal work, and the present state of things involved, to a considerable extent, a practical denial of justice. He hoped the Government would seriously and immediately take this subject into consideration.

Sir F. Crossley rose to speak to the motion, when An Hon. Member moved that the House be counted.

The Speaker accordingly proceeded to count, and, having ascertained that forty members were not present, adjourned the House at ten minutes to ten o'clock.

Wednesday, June 24.

MISAPPROPRIATION BY SERVANTS BILL.

Mr. Staniland said, that the object of this bill was to alter the law which adjudged it to be felony for a servant to take his master's corn for the purpose of feeding his master's horses. The judges of assizes felt great repugnance to sentencing servants under the present law, and juries not unfrequently found them not guilty in the face of the clearest evidence. He proposed to reduce the character of the offence so that it might cease to be a felony, and might be dealt with by two magistrates in petty sessions. Offenders were to be imprisoned, either with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding three months, or to be subject to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* Believing that the certainty of punishment would deter farm servants from the commission of this offence, while it would save their masters the expense and inconvenience of prosecuting at sessions and assizes, he moved the second reading of the bill.

Sir G. Grey said he had no objection to offer to the second reading. It would be necessary, however, to take care that the first clause should not apply to the case of servants who might take their masters' corn for the purpose of selling it.

The bill was then read a second time.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.—A meeting of this society took place at its rooms, 3, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, on Monday, the 22nd June, Lord Brougham in the chair. A paper was read by Mr. Robert Stuart, on "The Trial of Issues involving the Consideration of Scientific Evidence and the Evidence of Experts." Mr. Hastings, Mr. Edward Lawrence, Mr. Edgar, Mr. H. Geale, and Mr. Edward Webster addressed the meeting on the subject.

STONE'S PRACTICE OF PETTY SESSIONS.

With the Statutes, a List of Summary Convictions, and an Appendix of Forms. Seventh Edition. By THOMAS BELL and LEWIS W. CAVE, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. With a Supplement, bringing the Statutes and Cases up to 1863. 12mo., price 18s. cloth.

"It is remarkable for a rare combination of conciseness and clearness in the composition, which have recommended it to magistrates who have not been educated as lawyers, and to whom, therefore, the books written for the use of lawyers are often obscure by reason of their technicalities. The present editors have preserved this characteristic of Mr. Stone's volume in their own abundant additions to it."—Law Times.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JULY 4, 1863.

WE return to the consideration of the speech made by the Lord Chancellor on bringing into the House of Lords his bill for the revision and expurgation of the statute law. Since our former notice of the subject (ante, p. 223), that speech, corrected under his Lordship's supervision, has been published in a pamphlet, by Mr. Macqueen, Q. C., "with notes, chiefly containing citations, which were omitted for the sake of brevity." Mr. Macqueen has done good service by presenting the Profession and the public with an authentic report of this important speech; and we are happy to be able to add, that our quotations from it, as reported in The Times, differ in no material respect from the pamphlet.

We concluded with the Lord Chancellor's first proposal, namely, to revise and expurgate the reports, by which means his Lordship hopes to reduce them to one-tenth of their present bulk. This, however, to use a common expression, is a thing more easily said than done. That the number of our reports is excessive, and that a reduction of them would be hailed as a national benefit, is beyond dispute; but the task is one requiring a profound knowledge of the law, combined with the greatest judgment, and impartiality. Before the compilers of such a Digest omit any reported case from their collection, they must be indisputably satisfied, not only that it either never was law, or has ceased to be so, but that it cannot serve to illustrate any part of our jurisprudence.

The Lord Chancellor next directs his attention to the statute law, between which and the common law there is, he says, in this respect a remarkable similarity. After describing the present voluminous and unsatisfactory state of our statute-book, his Lordship proceeds:—"This, then, being the state of the law and of the statute-book, what I propose is the course dictated by natural good sense, that it shall be revised and expurgated—weeding away all those enactments that are no longer in force, and arranging and classifying what is left under proper heads, bringing the dispersed statutes together, eliminating jarring and discordant provisions, and thus getting a harmonious whole, instead of having, as at present, a chaos of inconsistent and contradictory enactments. With that view, we have with considerable care, and, I am sorry to say, after a longer period of time than I had desired, as the first step, examined and revised the whole of the statute roll from the 20th Henry III down to nearly the end of the eighteenth century. The statutes that are weeded out may be described as those which are no longer applicable to the modern state of society—enactments which have become wholly obsolete—enactments which have been repealed by obscure and indirect processes, which is one of the evils with which we have to contend, because it perpetually happens that a particular enactment is, in effect, repealed without its being said so by the indirect process of another general law. Sometimes it is repealed silently by the introduction of another rule, if that rule be inconsistent; but while these conflicts exist, and until they are extirpated from the statute-book, they are and will be constantly the cause of uncertainty. I may just bring to your recollection how common it is in a modern act of Parliament to say, 'all former enactments inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.' Or you repeal so much of an act as relates to such and such a matter, but it is often extremely difficult to determine what is inconsistent, and what is included in the words 'relating to.' But the plan goes farther:—"When the statute-book has been cleared of superfluous and unnecessary matter, I hope to propose that another process be gone through to which the previous labour is merely introductory. The enactments spread throughout the statute-book relating to different subjects must be brought together in a collected form. I shall propose, therefore, to have a systematic classification of the subject-matter of your legislation, preserving, however, the order of time, because the order of time in regard to enactments is most material for the proper understanding of the law, but arranging the different portions of the statute-book under appropriate heads, so as to present an accurate and methodical analysis of the law comprised under each head. And I hope, concurrently with this, that the corresponding parts of the common law extracted from the reports may be added, so that in that shape you may have a digest of the present law, both common and statute."

Here, again, we say, are things more easily said than done. It is very easy to say, and it seems to many a very simple matter to accomplish, "clear the statute-book of all useless statutes, and of all statutes which are repealed, either directly or indirectly, either by having fallen into disuse, or being inconsistent with subsequent enactments." But let any person take the thing in hand, he will soon find what he has to encounter.

In the first place, it by no means follows, that because a statute is repealed in order to make room for an improved one on the same subject, the former should be removed from the statute-book. The first statute has received a judicial construction, which, together with the statute itself, supplies the key to the understanding and construction of the amending act. Instances of this are to be found in every part of our law, especially the criminal portion.

But a task infinitely more difficult presents itself, when we proceed to determine what statutes are repealed by implication. Whether a given statute is inferentially repealed by a subsequent one, in which no allusion is made to it, is often a very embarrassing question to judicial tribunals, and one which cannot be satisfactorily disposed of without the fullest argument and deepest consideration. But the codifier or consolidator of our statute laws takes all such moot cases into his own consideration in camera, determines for himself what statutes are still in force, and what are impliedly repealed, and lays his conclusions before the world as something from which there is no appeal, and which is to be stereotyped into our law.

Many instances might be given illustrative of the difficulties to be encountered in carrying out such a plan; but we will confine ourselves to one, which we select as involving a very important constitutional question. What will the persons intrusted with this most responsible duty do with the 13 Car. 2, st. 1, c. 5, by which it is enacted, "That not more than twenty names shall be signed to any petition to the King or either House of Parliament, for any alteration of matters established by law in Church or State; unless the contents thereof be previously approved, in the country, by three justices, or the majority of the grand jury at the assizes or quarter sessions; and, in London, by the lord mayor, aldermen, and common council?" And in the same section is the further provision, "That no petition shall be delivered by a company of more than ten persons; on pain in either case of incurring a penalty not exceeding 100*l.* and three months' imprisonment." Is this statute repealed or not by the Bill of Rights, 1 Will. & M., st. 2, c. 2, by which it is declared that the subject hath a right to petition; and that all commitments and prosecutions for such petitioning are illegal? Mr. Justice Blackstone, in two places (1 Bl. Com. 147; 4 Id. 148) gives his decided opinion in the negative; and on the trial of Lord George Gordon for high treason in 1781, at the bar of the King's Bench, (Doug. 591, 593), Lord Mansfield told the jury, that he had never heard it supposed that the 13 Car. 2, st. 1, c. 5, was repealed; and that "it was the joint and clear opinion of the whole Court, that the Bill of Rights did not mean to meddle with it at all; that neither that, nor any other act of Parliament, had repealed it; and that it was in full force."

He would be a bold man who would contend at the present day, that the first part of this section is still in force—that petitions to the Sovereign or the Legislature, couched in proper language, are illegal, on the ground that they bear more than twenty signatures, and do not emanate from any of the privileged bodies specified in the statute. On the other hand, however, the second part of that section, prohibiting the presenting of petitions by a company of more than twenty persons, was treated, and perhaps, rightly, as being in force, by the Government of the day, in their proclamation denouncing the proposed Chartist meeting on Kennington Common on the 10th April, 1848, and we believe on some other occasions.

Want of space again compels us to leave unfinished our examination of this important speech.

SEPARATE ESTATE IN LAND.

In Harris v. Mott (14 Beav. 169), a married woman and her husband contracted to sell an estate which had been devised to her in fee for her sole and separate use and benefit. The wife died before the contract was completed, having devised the estate to her husband. The Master of the Rolls, in the absence of authority, and being of opinion that the object of limiting the estate to the wife's separate use was to protect her from her husband, and not to extend her power of disposition, refused to compel the purchaser to take the title without the concurrence of the heir. In the recent case of Lechmere v. Brothridge (11 Weekly Rep. 814) the same able judge distinctly decided against the title of the wife's alienees. In that case a testator had devised the Ashchurch estate to trustees, upon trust to permit Mrs. B. to receive the rents and profits during her life for her separate use, and after her decease, upon trust to permit her husband to receive the rents and profits during his life; and he gave the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust for certain persons for their lives, and then upon trust for Mrs. B. and two other persons, in equal shares, and declared that the share of Mrs. B. should be for her separate use. Mrs. B. and her husband executed a mortgage of the Ashchurch estate, and of Mrs. B.'s reversionary share in the residuary real and personal estate. Upon a bill filed by the mortgagees for a sale, and to have the concurrence of the trustees in the conveyance of the Ashchurch property, the Master of the Rolls held, that the mortgagees were entitled to sell the life interest of Mrs. B. in the Ashchurch estate, and her reversionary interest in the personalty, and that the deed did not affect her interest in the residuary real estate. His Honor was of opinion, upon principle and on the authorities, that a married woman could, without acknowledgment, alienate a life interest in real estate settled to her separate use. But when the inheritance on real estate is given to a married woman for her separate use—the intention being, as in other cases, only to bar the interest of the husband, and not to extend the power of disposition—there is no power over the fee. His Honor said, “The contention is, that the words ‘separate use,’ as regards alienation inter vivos*, have the following, and no other, meaning—viz. ‘I give my estate to A. and her heirs for ever, for her separate use; that is, I do so in order to enable her to dispose of it without any acknowledgment under the statute.’ I am of opinion that it is not in the power of any testator to avoid the statute by the introduction of any such words, any more than he could have done if he had expressed his meaning distinctly thus:—‘I leave Whiteacre to A. and her heirs for ever, and I declare that my intention is that she may dispose of the same without acknowledgment under the stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74.’ The common law, independently of equity, treats the wife as the separate owner of the land, so far as the inheritance in it is concerned.” His Honor distinguished Atcheson v. Le Mann on the ground that the wife there took a testamentary power; and he refused to be governed by Adams v. Gamble (12 Ir. Eq. 102), because the judges of the court which reversed the decision of the Lord Chancellor were not unanimous. With respect to personalty, no distinction could be made between vested and reversionary interests, because the husband's right as survivor is to be excluded.

It will be perceived that the decision in Lechmere v. Brotherhoods was founded solely on these two considerations—first, that the only intention of a trust for separate use is to exclude the marital right; secondly, that a testator or settlor cannot, by a mere expression of intention, repeal the Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries; or rather, dispense with it; for the act is enabling, and not restrictive, and cannot be said to be repealed by an authority to do in one way what it merely allows to be done in another way. So strongly did these considerations operate on the judgment of the Master of the Rolls, that he overruled the decision of the majority of the judges of the Court of Appeal in Ireland. It is, therefore, important to see whether they are well founded on authority or principle. Now, the second ground of decision is one which seems to be inconsistent not only with the authorities, but with the decision in the very case under consideration; for his Honor there held that Mrs. B. took a life interest in the Ashchurch estate for her separate use, which her husband could not dispose of, and that it passed by her own deed, without the aid of the statute; although, but for the trust for her separate use, the husband would only have taken an interest for the joint lives, and the ulterior interest of the wife could not have been passed otherwise than by an acknowledged deed. In so deciding, the Court only followed the authority of Major v. Lansley (2 Russ. & M. 355), where it was held that a married woman could dispose of a rent charge, given to her in reversion for her life, for her separate use; and of Stead v. Nelson (2 Beav. 245). But it is sufficient to refer to the authorities, which decide that a power over real estate given to a married woman may be exercised without an acknowledged deed, and that in a will, or in a declaration of trust inter vivos, any words which shew the intention are sufficient to confer such a power, and to “avoid” or “repeal” the statutory power. The words, “to be at her own disposal,” are sometimes inserted and sometimes omitted from these trusts. Is the extent of the wife's power to depend on their presence or absence?

Is the other ground of decision—that the sole object of a trust for separate use is to exclude the husband's interest—more tenable? Again, we may refer to the decree of the Master of the Rolls. If that be so, why did he give to the mortgagees the benefit of the interest in the Ashchurch estate which the wife would take if she survived her husband, and which could never have belonged to the husband? On the other hand, we may ask, if the object of a trust for separate use is to exclude the husband and not to protect the wife, is the husband's curtesy excluded by a trust of the inheritance for the wife's separate use, without an express declaration against curtesy as in Bennett v. Davis (2 P. Wms. 316)? But generally, seeing that a wife's disability at common law is absolute, and extends indifferently to realty and to personalty, so that, independently of powers and trusts, her interests in realty were only alienable by the anomalous contrivance of a fine, while her interests in personalty were absolutely inalienable at law and in equity, save so far as the law gave them to her husband, it would follow, if the doctrine of the Master of the Rolls were sound, that a wife's separate estate should be inalienable. It is not necessary, in order to exclude the husband, to confer a power of alienation on the wife; on the contrary, her protection is considered to be incomplete without an express restraint on alienation. But as regards personalty, and life interests in realty, at least, it is admitted and settled, that a trust for separate use does not merely exclude the husband, but also enables the wife. And this is the plain meaning of the words by which the trust is ordinarily created, “for the sole and separate use” of the wife. She cannot have the complete use of property unless she has complete dominion over it, so as to charge or sell it, if she will. If the use of land means, as the Master of the Rolls would have it, only the occupation of it, or the receipt of the profits, then the use of a chattel or of a personal fund means the possession of it, or the receipt of the interest or “usance” that the lending of it may bring in. It is settled, however, that this is not the meaning of the trust, even when it is expressed in terms referring exclusively to enjoyment by the wife personally. In Brandon v. Robinson (18 Ves. 429; 1 Roe, 197), Lord Eldon said:—“In regard to property given to the separate use of married women, the directions originally were, that the money was to be paid into their proper hands, and their receipts alone to be a discharge. It was held that a married woman might dispose of property so given to her, and that her assignee might take it, as this Court would compel her to give her own receipt in affirmance of her contract. It was not before Miss Watson's case that these words, ‘not be paid by anticipation,’ were introduced.” So in Pybus v. Smith (1 Ves. jun. 189), the question arising upon a direction to pay the rent of real estate to a married woman, or to such persons as she should “from time to time” appoint, Lord Thurlow, after consideration, held, that the words “from time to time” did not forbid a sweeping appointment of the whole. “So far forth as the instrument creating her separate estate makes her proprietor, so far she is a feme sole.” (P. 193). In Haig v. Swiney (1 Sim. & S. 489), Sir John Leach, following Ellon v. Shepherd (1 Bro. C. C. 532), held, that an absolute interest in a sum of stock given to trustees, passed under a trust to “apply and dispose of the interest and dividends thereof, as the same shall from time to time arise and be received, into the hands of Maria, wife of James Haigh, or otherwise to permit and suffer her to receive the same for her own sole and separate use and benefit, to the intent that the same may not be at the disposal of, or subject to the control or engagement of, her present or any after taken husband." And it is admitted that the property so taken was alienable. In Sturgis v. Corp (13 Ves. 192), Sir W. Grant held, that a reversionary interest in a fund given to a married woman for her separate use was alienable by her, expressly on the ground that "she was as to that property a feme sole." "All the cases shew that the personal^o property, where it can be enjoyed separately, must be so with all its incidents, and the jus disponendi is one of them." Per Lord Thurlow, in Fettiplace v. Gorges (3 Bro. C. C. 10), where it was strenuously argued against the wife's legatee, that the sole intent of the trust was to exclude the husband. See 9 Ves. 375. "It being once settled that a wife might enjoy separate estate as a feme sole, the laws of property attached to this new estate, and it was found, as part of that law, that the power of alienation belonged to the wife, and was destructive of the security intended for it. Equity again interfered, and, by another violation of the law of property, supported the validity of the prohibition against alienation." (Per Lord Cottenham, C., in Tullett v. Armstrong, 4 My. & C. 345).

* Referring to Atcheson v. Le Mann (23 Law T. 302), as to the effect in giving a devising power.
